(Pictures on Page 10.)

Associated Press Staff Writer

Bartley, W. Va., Jan. 11.—A ray of hope that two or three score of the 87 men still entombed in the explosion-rocked Bartley No. 1 coal mine may still be alive beamed down tonight upon the haggard, forlorn crow of relatives gathered about the pit.

Four bodies already have been located since a blast yesterday afternoon wrecked the tunnels 600 feet beneath the surface.

A veteran mining man, W. J. Greman, of Pocahontas, Va., who 30 years ago was working with the United States Bureau of Mines before he turned to mining himself, voiced the expression of several others in saying:

"Many of the men in this mine have a better chance to survive than in any mine explosion I have been to, judging from the setup."

Hopes 50 or 60 May Live

To which G. J. Stollings, general manager of the Pond Creek Pocahontas Coal Corporation, owners of the mine, added:

"We are hopeful that possibly 50 or 60 can be found alive."

Meanwhile rescuers working in relays continued to bore doggedly through the debris-clogged, gas-filled area in which the mining experts are hopeful the blast was centered and where about 25 men were working. It is those in the area beyond that who may be alive. The rescuers have found no evidence of flame or heat so far.

Officials estimated shortly before midnight it would be "several hours" before the men tunnel through the blasted area.

Rock Fall Broken Through

At 5:30 p. m. the crew broke through a heavy rock fall near the section where the blast occurred. About 60 men had been working in passageways close to that section.

Raymond Salvati, vice president of the company, said:

"There seems to be no excuse for the men (in that section) not being alive."

Passageways ahead of the rock fall, the company reported, appeared to be relatively free of debris.

Shortly before midnight Raymond Salvati, vice president of the coal concern, announced advances had placed rescuers within 200 feet of one section where men were believed to have been working and about 700 feet from another group.

An air base was set up at the farthest point reached, but a slate fall in that locality made it impossible to estimate how long it would take to travel the 200 feet.

Inquiries Under Way

Salvati had sanguine hopes also that some of the buried miners would be brought back alive to this little community, 18 miles southwest of Welch and 147 south of Charleston.

The blast centered about a mile and a quarter back in a corridor that leads from the main shaft, which is perpendicular. Cause of the explosion has not been determined, although State and Federal mine officials rushed here to make an investigation.

Scores of miners and relatives of the entombed men gathered near the shaft opening and stood in a cold drizzle, watching gloomily as the eight rescue crews changed shifts every 30 minutes. Each time

WPA Here Dumping Ground For Job Hunters, Chiefs Say

Reply to Rep. Byrns' Charge of Snub Cites Flood of Requests

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

A hint that the District WPA is threatened with becoming a "political dumping ground," followed the official opening of the WPA and District hunting seasons in the House yesterday.

An average of 35 calls a day are received from members of Congress or their secretaries at the office of Paul Edwards, local WPA administrator, it was learned as Representative Joseph W. Byrns (Democrat), of Tennessee, attacked him for "two-bit arrogance."

The WPA administrator has been besieged recently with demands that he find well-paying jobs for constituents of Congressmen, a WPA official said, but he considers his first responsibility is to give employment to bona-fide District residents.

Representative Byrns, son of the late Speaker, was still hopping mad last night despite an explanation by Edwards that he had known nothing of a call by the Congressman. He said that he is looking into the administrator's record and intends to renew the attack within a few days.

In one of the few speeches he has made since succeeding his father in the House, Byrns, still a youngster in comparison with his colleagues, drew applause when he told of his attempt to arrange an appointment with Edwards for a jobless constituent.

"I have long noticed countless evidences of insolence and arrogance on the part of two-bit nit-wits in the Federal service in the District of Columbia," Byrns said, "but this morning there came the crowning evidence of that action on the part

Brown to Hear Plan for Teeth In Traffic Law

He Will Meet Monday With Key Officers on Ways to Cut Deaths

By Marshall Andrews

A year-round, 24-hour program of traffic enforcement with teeth in it, to the end that Washington may boast "a traffic record second to no other city," is expected to result from a round-table discussion of traffic plans Monday.

The conference, called by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, will include inspectors and captains in the department. Rigid law enforcement, Maj. Brown said, will be its keynote, in an effort to eliminate negligence on the highways and cut accidents to a minimum.

From it is expected to emerge a continuing, relentless campaign against careless and reckless drivers on Washington's streets.

First on the schedule, Brown said, will be consideration of a recent recommendation of Inspector William B. Holmes, traffic supervisor, looking toward sharp curtailment of speed. Outstanding is his proposal that speeds at night be cut to 20 miles an hour in 25-mile zones and 25 miles an hour in 30-mile zones.

Brown said this had brought considerable "unfavorable reaction" from many citizens, including mem-

Farm Fund Ultimatum Perils Budget

$807,000,000 Plan Goes to Congress Unless He Acts, Roosevelt Told

By Cecil B. Dickson.

Disruption of President Roosevelt's $8,424,000,000 budget was threatened yesterday by a blunt demand that Congress provide $807,000,000 additional for farm benefit payments.

In the face of a spreading economy drive in Congress, Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, served notice on Mr. Roosevelt that the budget must be boosted to swell farm appropriations to $1,707,000,000.

O'Neal warned the President at a White House conference that if he refused to request the additional funds, O'Neal would take the issue direct to Congress. In his budget, Mr. Roosevelt omitted parity-payment estimates.

Another threat to the budget came as representatives of 24 States gathered for a meeting in the Raleigh Hotel today to organize for getting about $180,000,000 for flood control.

Lawrence W. Campbell, managing director of the Johnstown (Pa.) Chamber of Commerce, explained that the approximate amount appropriated for this fiscal year would in all probability be needed in 1941

House Avoids Reapportionment Of Seats, Safeguards Its Jobs

By Alfred Friendly.

At noon on Wednesday, a number of Congressmen sent down the drain the original, constitutional reason for taking the national census. Just incidentally, they saved their $10,000 seats from being reapportioned out of existence.

They accomplished this end by sitting tight and doing nothing. The agent that did the work was the twentieth, or lame duck, amendment to the Constitution.

The primary purpose of taking a decennial census, as conceived by the Founding Fathers, was to provide a basis for apportioning the number of seats in the House of Representatives. A number of Congressmen, fearful that the 1940 count would show a smaller proportionate population in their States and thus result in less Congressional districts, were able to negate this purpose through one of the most complicated and cockeyed legalistic maneuvers in recent history.

This is the background:

After the 1910 census, Congress increased the number of seats in the House from 391 to 435, so that no State would lose any Representatives by a reapportionment after enumeration.

After the 1920 census, Congress failed to reapportion itself, despite a Constitutional mandate to do so.

Navy Asks 2 Billions For 195 Ships

Would Lay Down Fleet in 2 Years to Beat Any Coalition If Allies Lose

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Navy revealed plans yesterday for laying down 195 warships within the next two years at a cost in excess of $2,000,000,000.

Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations, answering contentions that the pending naval expansion bill would simply create "another paper fleet," said the Navy planned to construct the additional ships "at once."

"We must face the possibility of an Allied defeat in the war," he told the House Naval Affairs Committee, "and then measure the strength of the powers which might combine for action against the Americas.

"If our Navy is weaker than the combined strengths of potential enemies, then our Navy is too small. It is too small, viewed from that angle, so an increase is necessary."

Walsh Challenges Plan

Chairman Walsh, of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, had challenged the need for the plan to enlarge the fleet by 25 per cent, declaring that 64 additional ships could be built at once, without it.

Stark told the committee that the increase proposed represented a compromise on the ultimate defense needs of the United States. Questions of time, cost and available building facilities had to be considered, he stated, and urged that the program's "practicability and moderation" were two of its most important factors.

"Theoretically," he said, "we should add units to bring the United States Fleet up to not less than that required to defend the United States, its interests and possessions, and maintain the integrity of the Monroe Doctrine against the combined navies of our potential enemies in both oceans."

The naval chief told the committee the building plans contemplated completion of all the ships in the program by 1945. As naval vessels normally take three to four years to build from time the money is provided, officials pointed out that to accomplish this objective, all will have to be voted and laid down within two years.

Guards Against Four Powers

Twenty-four ships of all classes are asked in the present budget, while 64 more could be built now without additional authorization. The bill under study would provide 107 ships.

"I should like to make it perfectly clear," Stark stated, "that what we have asked for, which we believe will maintain the 5-3 ratio in the Pacific, is not sufficient to defend our home waters, the Monroe Doctrine, our possessions and our trade routes against a coalition, that has been mentioned in the committee, of Japan, Russia, Germany and Italy.

"If we are attacked by the above combination, as has been asked me, something would have to be abandoned. Obviously, it could not be our home coasts; and obviously Hawaii, the Panama Canal and its approaches, and the Atlantic Coastal shipping are of vital interest. I believe we could give a fair account of ourselves in protection of these vital interests."

Shopkeeper Guilty In School-Zone Gambling Drive

Soviets Open Drive to Ease Finn Pressure

Attacks on Arctic, Salla Fronts Hurled Back; Full Story Of Disasters Told

By Walter Kerr
Copyright, 1940, by N. Y. Tribune, Inc.

Rovaniemi, Finland, Jan. 11. Russian forces attacked yesterday and again today at Petsamo and Salla above the Arctic Circle as if they were engaged in a mighty effort to relieve pressure on the central front where the Finnish army is moving into Soviet territory after a great Finnish victory east of Suomussalmi.

The Red forces were repulsed, the Finnish command reported tonight, but the motive behind their assaults seemed apparent in the light of the battle of Suomussalmi, where the Finnish command handled the Russian forces as effectively and in about the same manner as the German World War commanders, Hindenburg, Ludendorff and Hoffmann crushed the Russians at the Battle of Tannenberg in 1914.

Just as the German command did at Tannenberg, the Finns in their recent victory smashed one Soviet division and then crippled another. In the World War battle, Rennenkampf hung tight to his position after his first engagement with the Germans until Samsanov's defeat. In the Suomussalmi battle the Russian forty-fourth division held back its attack until the Finns had annihilated the Russian 163d division. Then it was too late to strike, and the forty-fourth division went under before the same Finnish army that had destroyed the 163d.

Toll Frightful

The Finnish victory resulted in a frightful toll in dead and wounded Russians, and gunfire is still heard in the woods as Finnish patrols hunt down Russian troops who escaped during the battle. These hunted men are all that is left of the two finest divisions in the Red army. They were well-clad and decently equipped, with good rifles, gas masks and plenty of food.

But they were destroyed, according to Finnish military sources, because they were poorly commanded, because they never knew what the Finns were doing and because they had been poorly trained for warfare in the Arctic.

This is what happened. The two Soviet divisions marched down toward Suomussalmi in the early days of the war. They came from the east along a road that had been constructed secretly in peacetime. The going was easy up to the frontier and there, astonished by their numbers, the Finns fell back.

Three-day Assault

The 163d division came from the north along Lake Kianta, and the forty-fourth approached from the east. They joined and December 6 occupied Suomussalmi, which had been reduced to ashes by two Finnish companies. Then the Finns brought up a regiment and struck at the town. In five days of fighting they broke the weak connecting link between the two Red divisions, which took up defensive positions along the road by which they had entered the town.

Meanwhile, the Finns had brought up reinforcements. On Christmas Eve they faked an attack on the forty-fourth division, frightening its

Other possibilities for the post include two former foreign ministers, Gen. Kazushige Ugaki and Koki Hirota, and former minister of commerce and industry, Seihin Ikeda. The army is understood to oppose Ikeda.

Extension of Policies Urged as Weapon For Peace And Prosperity

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Secretary of State Hull yesterday called on Congress to extend his reciprocal trade policies as an effective weapon for peace and prosperity, and a guard against world-wide economic anarchy after the war.

It was the Administration's opening salute, setting off the session's biggest single legislative battle. Hull appeared as first witness before the House Ways and Means Committee. Quietly he read his prepared statement then parried, thrust for thrust, a bitter Republican attack.

"The choice before us," he told the committee, "is whether we shall lead the way toward the slough of despair and ruin for ourselves and for others, or toward the heights of economic progress, sustained prosperity and enduring peace for our Nation and for the world."

For four hours of morning and afternoon hearings the slender, gray Secretary of State faced committee questioners, appealed for abandonment of partisan and political consideration in a "grave emergency," and drummed out statistics to show expanded foreign markets for both American farm and manufactured products under his policies.

Administration officials on a wide front, meanwhile, swung into action behind the program. Assistant Secretary of State Grady in a broadcast from New York said that both American agriculture and industry have "benefited substantially" from the program and stand to benefit more. United States Maritime Commissioner Max Truitt told an American Merchant Marine Institute luncheon in New York that the program is essential to all segments of the national economy and particularly "to those who make their living from shipping in foreign commerce."

Assails G. O. P. Theories

Sympathetically queried by Democrats, Secretary Hull met an attack from four Republican committee members, whose protectionist theories he assailed as contributing toward the last world depression.

Three of these were his colleagues on the same Ways and Means Committee 20 years ago, and one, Representative Treadway, of Massachusetts, remarked:

"We are still as far apart as we were then."

And Hull smilingly shot back, "Yes; but I am considering conditions as they are now, while you still are thinking of conditions 20 years ago."

Led on by Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, Hull developed his argument that the reciprocal trade act must be kept alive to aid in postwar economic reconstruction and to avert a "disastrous" march toward increasing economic nationalism.

Abandonment of the program, he said, would be a message to the world that the United States has reverted to isolationism and will take no part in postwar economic rehabilitation.

World Lives on Half Rations

Hull said that today the world is living on "half rations," that 25,000,000 men are under arms in Europe and Asia, and that two or three men are required to supply every man under arms.

This means that when peace comes, he emphasized, 80,000,000 to 100,000,000 men suddenly will be thrown back into civil life, giving impetus to totalitarian and regimenting trends in nations coping with postwar stress.

Copenhagen, Jan. 11.—A sharp shakeup in the Soviet army and recall of more than 100 army officers for failure to achieve greater success in Finland were described today in reports reaching Norwegian and Finnish quarters.

Swedish King Offers to Help In Peace Talks

Pledges All Aid to Finns Compatible With Neutrality

By International News Service

Stockholm, Jan. 11.—King Gustaf today pledged Sweden to give Finland all aid compatible with Swedish neutrality and declared his readiness to help in any action that might be undertaken for the restoration of Europe's shattered peace.

In a speech from the throne, opening the most important session of the Parliament in recent history, the elderly monarch said:

"The involvement of Finland in armed struggle affects my people most intimately. My people's willingness to rush assistance to our neighboring people is manifested in an unmistakable way.

"Sweden was and is conscious of her obligations to give the valiant Finnish people all the material and humanitarian help it is possible to give while bearing in mind our own position."

In these words the King was careful to avoid anything that might be interpreted as committing Sweden to give official and direct military assistance to the Finns against Soviet Russia. But he made it plain Sweden would fight if her independence becomes jeopardized.

Nazi Bomber Fleet Raids British Coast for 400 Miles

By James B. Reston.

London, Jan. 11.—Britain saw the shadow of Germany's threatened mass air attack today when scattered squads of big black Nazi bombers raided six military objectives over 400 miles of east coast line. Not a single bomb fell on land and not one plane came down.

Flying sometimes singly, sometimes in threes and dipping down between anti-aircraft fire to make photographs, then soaring to 20,000 feet or more, the German planes were seen over the London area and from there northward to Newcastle on Tyne and the southeast of Scotland to the Firth of Forth.

The first planes appeared at 10 o'clock this morning at the mouth of the Tyne near Newcastle, a coal, exporting and cannon manufacturing and shipbuilding center. There were three on this trip.

First they circled over South Shields, an important manufacturing district at the mouth of the Tyne. They were met by a shower of anti-aircraft shells but circled out to sea for a few minutes and then swerved nearer to Newcastle which stands high on the sloping

FOURTH DECADE: Many government officials and quite a few pundits, prophets and soothsayers went off the deep end when they referred learnedly to the year 1939 as the last year of the fourth decade of the twentieth century.

Actually, the fourth decade won't end until December 31, 1940. At that time these learned gentlemen will have another chance to analyze this chaotic ecade, in the light of what happens in its still cryptic final year.

POTENT 12: It would take only 12 solid States to nominate Roosevelt for a third term; or for that matter to nominate any other candidate in 1940. G. O. P. Gets Busts Of Three Notables

The Republican National Committee received yesterday a gift of busts and portraits of Alexander Hamilton, Benjamin Franklin and Abraham Lincoln from William Guggenheim.

The presentation was made by Alexander Hamilton, of New York, a great-great-grandson of the first Secretary of the Treasury, who remarked that "in these days of economic debauchery, it is timely that public attention be centered on the principles for which the first of these two great Americans stood and to the political faith of the party that the third had to found to perpetuate them."

No Harm Done By Trade Pacts, Lindley Says

'Some Incidental Good' Resulted, He Holds, Urging Continuance

Continuance of Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade treaty policy was given qualified indorsement last night by Ernest K. Lindley, Post columnist, on the ground that the policy "hasn't been a great success."

Lindley saw several "dangerous fallacies" behind the policy, but said the program had met only limited success, and, therefore, has done no serious damage and "some incidental good."

"We might have preferred that the country should have set out on a different policy in 1933," he said, "but having followed it now for six years we might find a change at this particular moment would have an unfortunate effect on the world political situation."

Lindley spoke at the Jewish Community Center. After his talk, the audience heard the Town Hall of the Air debate on extension of the trade treaties.

Finds Results Sparse

Tangible results of the treaties have been negligible, according to the columnist. Farmers haven't suffered and may have gained slight benefits from the agreements, he said. Trade statistics are no guide to the results of the policy, he asserted, since "our foreign trade has gone up and down more as the result of internal economic conditions in this country."

Chief fallacy in the Hull program, he maintained, is its failure to look on the United States as "a continental power of great resources and skills. We have been going along since 1933 without any careful examination of our country's capacity to work out a pretty good economy more or less independent of foreign trade."

"The more we build up our foreign trade," he continued, "the more we expose our own economy to the sweep of world forces. It's too bad we didn't start earlier on a stronger regional policy, in the face of a world in turmoil—a world that may stay in turmoil for quite a while."

If the Hull policy had been carried as far as its sponsors hoped, Lindley contended, "it would have increased the danger of our own involvement in war by building up our commercial stake in the economy of Europe."

Sugar Treaty Discussed

Cuba's reciprocal trade treaty with the United States has given this country a virtual monopoly of the Cuban market, Dr. Raoul Herrera Arango, Second Secretary to the Cuban Embassy, told the Pan American Club of the Young Men's Christian Association last night.

As a result of the shrinkage of the cane sugar market in Europe due to the increase of beet sugar production since the war, Dr. Arango said, Cuba has become almost entirely dependent on the American market for the sale of her principal product.

The treaty of 1934, the first of Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade treaty program, guarantees Cuba 30 per cent of the American sugar market, he declared. In 1926, before the sugar quota was established, Cuba supplied 55 per cent of that market, he added.

On Capitol Hill

By the Associated Press

Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, disclosed yesterday that he would ask Congress to order a new study of the social security act with a view to increasing unemployment insurance payments in the lower brackets and establishing sick benefits.

SEN. WAGNER

The Finance Committee would make the study, possibly in conjunction with members of the House Ways and Means Committee.

"A workman who is thrown out of a job through no fault of his own can get unemployment insurance," Wagner said. "If he is injured, he gets compensation, but if he is taken ill and can't work he gets nothing. I think some provision ought to be made for such cases."

He said also that he thought it might be possible to reduce the period, now 14 days in most States, which persons who have been thrown out of work must wait before they can get unemployment benefits. He said also that he favored an increase in the $5 weekly minimum of such payments now.

Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, is trying out a rabbit's foot as a good luck charm. It was a present on his eighty-second birthday anniversary last week from Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

"It hasn't brought much good luck yet," Glass said with a smile.

The Senate Banking Committee approved yesterday the reappointment of five members of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They were Emil Schram, of Illinois; Carroll B. Merriam, of Kansas; Charles B. Henderson, of Nevada; Howard J. Klossner, of Minnesota, and Sam Husbands, of South Carolina.

Congress may be here until late June, in the opinion of Senate Leader Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky.

"I don't take much stock in early adjournment plans that you hear discussed in January," Barkley said.

The House Rules Committee will meet next week to consider legislation to re-create the Dies Committee on un-American Activities.

An informal poll showed that the renewal authorization would be approved by the committee. Both critics and proponents of the investigation have predicted that the House would roll up an overwhelming vote for renewal. The committee expired January 3.

Edison Confirmed by Senate; Sub-committee Favors Murphy

Harris & Ewing

Senator Edward Burke (left), chairman of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee, gives his best wishes to Frank Murphy, whose nomination to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court was indorsed by the subcommittee yesterday.

Charles Edison was confirmed by the Senate yesterday as Secretary of the Navy after a scorching attack by Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, upon the appointee's proposal that President Roosevelt be empowered to commandeer ships, materials and factories in peace-time "emergencies."

Borah said the plan would constitute "an impeachment of the whole scheme of democracy" and cause "infinitely more harm than a thousand Communists chattering on the street corners."

The Senate also confirmed a list of State Department, diplomatic, and sub-Cabinet appointments, while a Senate Judiciary subcommittee heard Frank Murphy, former Attorney General, defend his record as Governor in the sit-down strikes in Michigan, then approved him as an associate justice of the Supreme Court. No doubt was expressed that Mr. Murphy would be confirmed later.

The subcommittee heard Murphy promise to "lean over backwards" in his decisions as to whether he should sit on cases in which he had been active as Attorney General came before the court.

Among the specific examples brought up by Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, subcommittee chairman, was the case of several oil company executives in the Midwest who were prosecuted for having conspired to violate the anti-trust laws. The trial court set aside a jury verdict against them, was upheld by the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court, by a four-to-four tie, affirmed the decision of the circuit court. The Justice Department, under Murphy, gave notice that it intended to ask for a rehearing.

If Murphy decides to remove himself in this case, it reduces to futility the request for a rehearing.

Besides the unanimous confirmation of Edison, the Senate confirmed the following Presidential nominations:

Breckinridge Long, Assistant Secretary of State; John Cudahy, Ambassador to Belgium; George S. Messersmith, Ambassador to Cuba; R. Henry Norweb, Ambassador to Peru; James H. R. Cromwell, Minister to Canada; Clarence E. Gauss, Minister to Australia; Robert M. Scotten, Minister to Dominican Republic; Daniel W. Bell, Undersecretary of Treasury; John L. Sullivan, Assistant Secretary of Treasury.

The Gallup Poll

Sentiment for Third Term Increasing Since War but Majority Still Is Opposed

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 11.—Although Franklin D. Roosevelt's popularity as President continues about as great today as in the election year of 1936, evidence that the idea of a Roosevelt third term has not been accepted by a majority of voters is indicated in a national American Institute of Public Opinion survey.

GEORGE GALLUP

For many months the Institute, by means of repeated cross-section studies, has kept two separate and distinct indices of public sentiment regarding the President. One is the month-by-month popularity of Mr. Roosevelt in his role as Chief Executive, this index being determined by responses to the question: "In general, do you approve today of Roosevelt as President?"

The other is an index of the number of voters who are for or against the principle of a Roosevelt third term, as measured by responses to the question:

"If President Roosevelt runs for a third term will you vote for him?"

Between the two indices there is generally a difference in result of from 15 to 20 percentage points, for the reason that not all of the voters who approve of the President at this stage of his second term say they would be willing to vote for him for a third term.

In the most recent third term survey, completed this week, 46 per cent of voters questioned said they would vote for Roosevelt if he ran again. This is substantially smaller than the number who approve of him as President today, as the following comparison shows:

"In general, do you approve or disapprove today of Mr. Roosevelt as President?"
December:
Approve	63.5%
Disapprove	36.5
"If President Roosevelt runs for a third term will you vote for him?"
Today:
Yes	46%
No	54

The trend of sentiment in the last few months, however, has been in a direction decidedly favorable to a third term. Since the beginning of the European war crisis last summer there has been a sharp increase in the number of voters in institute surveys who say they would vote for Roosevelt for another term.

	Would Vote for Third Term	Would Vote Against
May	33%	67%
August	40	60
October	43	57
Today	46	54

These figures do not constitute any sort of forecast of what would happen if President Roosevelt actually did run for a third term; they are merely a measure of sentiment on the general third term principle at this particular time. The course of events, at home and abroad, may profoundly influence sentiment one way or the other before the President finally announces his decision regarding 1940.

An overwhelming proportion of Democratic voters interviewed in the poll said they would vote for a Roosevelt third term.

Republicans, however, are even more intense in opposing a Roosevelt third term than Democrats are in favoring it. Thus, while the Democrats are about 8 to 2 for a third term, Republicans are more than 9 to 1 against it. The combination of Republicans plus the minority of anti-third term Democrats is enough to tip the balance of national sentiment against the third term at this time.

	Would Vote For 3d Term	Would Vote Against
Democrats	79%	21%
Republicans	7	93

Morgenthau Asks Curb on Banking Ties

Wants Regulation Or Prohibition of Holding Companies

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau yesterday again urged enactment by Congress of legislation to abolish or regulate bank holding companies. At his press conference, he recalled that he had been advocating such legislation for three years.

He told reporters that, notwithstanding criticism from the Giannini banking interests in California, he intended to regulate national banks in the interest of depositors.

L. M. Giannini, president of Bank of America, largest bank in the Giannini group, had accused Morgenthau of persecuting the bank's management and threatened to dissolve the bank and form a State-chartered institution in its place.

"It is my job," Morgenthau declared, "to protect the depositors of all national banks, and as long as I am here and have any breath in my body I am going to continue to do so notwithstanding any amount of abuse heaped on my head by any bank."

Enactment of bank holding company legislation would give Federal authorities a new weapon in dealing with the Giannini banking organization, which is tied together through Transamerica Corporation, largest of the bank holding companies.

Informed at San Francisco of Morgenthau's comment, Giannini described it as "melodramatic reaction" and said his charge of persecution had not been answered.

Various bank holding company legislative proposals have been offered in Congress, but none has been acted upon. Officials of Federal banking agencies held a number of conferences on the subject, but, according to reliable reports, Chairman Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board opposed Morgenthau's legislative suggestions.

NLRB Consistency Questioned

Admitted Evidence After Hearing Closed, Testimony Reveals

By John B. Oakes

Consistency of NLRB procedure was questioned before the Smith committee yesterday, as Counsel Edmund M. Toland continued his parade of the board's woman lawyers to the witness stand.

For the fourth successive day, women gave testimony, as Toland indicated his intention of interrogating all the board's feminine review attorneys—numbering about 17 of the 104 lawyers in the review division.

With Miss Margaret McDuff Farmer on the stand, Toland produced evidence to show that in the Sorg Paper Co. case, the board had refused to admit company evidence after the hearings were closed.

In the General Leather Products Co. case, however, it was shown—with Miss Fannie M. Boyls as witness—that the board itself had gone beyond the record, after hearings were closed, to establish certain facts.

Attorneys for the Sorg Co. submitted to the board, after hearings were over, a petition from some of the employes in one of the company's two plants in Middletown, Ohio, saying they did not wish to be represented by the dominant C. I. O. union in the other.

C. I. O. Objected

The C. I. O. vigorously objected to consideration of this new evidence, Tolan pointed out. A letter from Philip G. Phillips, NLRB regional director, suggested to a board official that "the precedent of . . . introducing evidence after trial is a dangerous one."

Following yesterday's committee session, NLRB Counsel Charles Fahy said that consideration of the petition was unnecessary in this case because it would not have affected the final decision of the board, which held that both plants be treated as one unit.

Toland presented evidence to show that Phillips also passed on to the Board a C. I. O. plea that the decision in the Sorg case be speeded, because "unless a decision is soon rendered, they fear their ranks will be so broken by delay they will have no chance of winning."

On another occasion, Phillips, who appeared as a Smith committee witness last month, wrote a board official that C. I. O. representatives felt that if the Sorg decision were not made public prior to another case, the effect would be "rather disastrous" for the union.

Phillips Sought Decision

"I am wondering if it would not be possible to release the decision in Sorg before the one in Lorillard," wrote Phillips.

In contrast to the board's action in refusing to admit company evidence after the close of hearings in the Sorg case, Toland earlier in the day had presented to the committee the details of the General Leather Products case.

In this matter, it was shown that the board was uncertain from the trial examiner's report whether some of the employes in the factory wanted to be represented by an organization other than the Suitcase, Bag and Portfolio Makers Union, at that time independent but later affiliated with C. I. O.

Miss Boyls, who handled the case, agreed that Board Chairman J. Warren Madden had asked for information on the case that was not contained in the original record.

"We just didn't have enough information to go ahead," she said. "The idea in a representation case of this type is just to get all the information—it doesn't make any difference whether it is in the transcript or whether we have to get it by exhibits later on."

Protesting about the delay in this case, Mrs. Elinore M. Herrick, New York regional director, wrote that "if we can't speed up our whole R (representation) procedure, both in the field and in Washington, we might better go out of business."

La. Officials Are Mimicked As Convicts

Parade of Farmers Depicts Huey Long's Heirs Breaking Rock

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Jan. 11.—Louisiana's turbulent gubernatorial campaign neared its January 16 climax tonight with appearance on venerable old Canal street of a "convicts' parade," in which many of the State's politicians were depicted clothed in stripes, breaking rocks or cutting sugar cane.

James H. Morrison, 31-year-old candidate for Governor and sworn enemy of the administration machine Huey P. Long built here, arose from a sick bed to lead the bizarre aggregation of strawberry farmers from his home district down the street lined with gaping thousands.

The lead float of 25 depicted Mayor Robert S. Maestri of New Orleans, the State's most powerful politician, sitting solidly on the closed and padlocked books of the State department which he headed before becoming mayor. Local newspapers and various citizens groups have been clamoring for six months to see these books, which were closed to public scrutiny last June when Long became Governor. The explanation was that they were being audited.

Gov. Long was given a key position below the Maestri float in the parade, where he was mounted on a messenger boy's bicycle awaiting Maestri's orders.

The parade was a reflection of the widespread Federal investigation in Louisiana. Since last June the Government has won conviction on mail fraud charges of Seymour Weiss, Abraham L. Shushan, Dr. James Monroe Smith and seven others, and indictment on several counts of former Gov. Richard W. Leche. Scores of other persons are soon to face trial.

First Lady Sees Laboratories, Asks Questions on D.C. Health

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt gets an inside view of the "bacteria world" at the Health Department

Inquires if Appropriations' Control by Persons Living Elsewhere Part of Time Is Difficulty; Hears Congress Is Interested

Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday asked District health officials if one of their "difficulties" was the control of the purse strings by Congress, whose members might "live elsewhere most of the time" and not get full information.

Accompanied by representatives of the National Democratic Women's Club, Mrs. Roosevelt led an informal discussion with Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer, and then toured the department laboratories.

After a description of the needs of the Health Department by Dr. Seckinger, Mrs. Roosevelt made the inquiry about the fiscal setup.

First Lady Reassured

Dr. Seckinger told her the "people who have the responsibility for the funds for the District usually get adequate information." Dr. Seckinger assured her that the members of Congress took a "vital interest" in the affairs of the District.

Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, chairman of the women's committee of the National Democratic Committee, who arranged the tour, said her group was interested in "kno ing what our committees are doing so we can vote more intelligently on the policies of government we want to see carried out."

Mrs. Roosevelt's first question was whether the District had adequate facilities for mothers in need of free care in childbirth. Dr. Seckinger replied the department was endeavoring to meet the needs, but that the beds in the hospitals are limited. He pointed out, however, that the new additions at Gallinger Hospital would relieve the situation somewhat.

One of the "pressing things" at this time is the tuberculosis problem, he told the group. He said there was a waiting list at the Glenn Dale Sanatoria and that the housing conditions in some sections of the city aggravated the problem. More medical social workers are needed to "discover" the tuberculosis patient, he stated. The District has 150 public health nurses, but according to established national standards there should be at least 300, he contended.

Mrs. Roosevelt complimented Dr. Reid R. Ashworth, head of the food inspection service, for his two-year drive to "clean up" the District's eating establishments. In the laboratory she was shown how the number of bacteria taken from eating utensils are counted and controlled. Dr. Ashworth told her the best way to keep the utensils clean is "to use plenty of hot water."

Strides Related

Strides in reducing the infant and maternal mortality rates in the past five years were related to the group. Mrs. Roosevelt also asked whether the District had a syphilis campaign and whether clinics were available for treatments. Dr. Seckinger said the clinics are crowded, but that the new Southwest health center and the projected health center for northwest central Washington would eliminate this trouble.

Mrs. Roosevelt commented that bad housing and poor food for some Washington families was a large factor in disease.

Others in the group were wives of members of Congress. They were Mrs Jerry Voorhis, Mrs. John Murdock, Mrs. John Rankin, Mrs. Frank Hook and Mrs. Herman Eberharter.

Associated Gas Holding Denied Loan by RFC

NY PA NJ Company Asked $26,500,000; Jones Tells of Refusal

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

Federal Loan Administrator Jesse H. Jones disclosed yesterday that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had refused to make a $26,500,000 loan to the N. Y., Pa., N. J. Utilities Co., a subsidiary of the Associated Gas & Electric Corporation.

The reason, he said, "probably was the same" as that which caused the Securities and Exchange Commission to order the Associated Gas & Electric Corporation to cease paying dividends to Associated Gas & Electric Co.

As a result of the SEC order, handed down Wednesday, Associated Gas & Electric Co. filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition in the Federal Court for the Northern District of New York at Utica.

Dividends Ordered Stopped

Associated Gas & Electric Corporation, second holding company from the top in the billion dollar Associated Gas & Electric utility empire, filed a similar petition at Utica yesterday.

The SEC directed Associated Gas & Electric Corporation to cease paying dividends on its capital stock, all of which is owned by Associated Gas & Electric Co., top holding company in the system, and also the corporation's request for permission to pay interest on a note held by the parent holding company. The effect was to cut off the latter's revenue sources.

The reason assigned by the commission was that the corporation would be paying dividends out of capital in contravention of the 1935 holding company act.

Petitions Approved

Federal Judge Frederick H. Bryant approved the petitions of both companies. Holders of various securities and their trustees were restrained by injunction from interfering with the proceedings.

Judge Bryant directed hearings to be held February 20 at Malone, N. Y., at which objections may be made to the retention of any trustee who may be appointed. The proceedings, begun under authority of the Chandler oankruptcy act, will permit reorganization of the companies under supervision of the court.

Meanwhile, bonds of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. suffered a sharp drop in price on the New York Curb Exchange. Within the first two hours of trading, each of the five issues listed on the curb were selling under $200 per $1,000 bond as contrasted with a 1939-40 high of $470 to $682.50 per bond.

Refusal of the RFC to come to the aid of the subsidiary company was believed to have been one of the factors inducing the companies to seek reorganization.

Jones said the N. Y., Pa., N. J. Utilities Co. "wanted money to work upstream in an effort to avoid what has happened." He said some of the money was to go to the holding companies superimposed on the N. Y., Pa., N. J. Co.

The RFC rejected the application, he said, on December 15 or 16.

N. Y., Pa., N. J. filed with the SEC in November a declaration covering the issuance and sale of $26,500,000 of promissory notes to the RFC. But since the RFC rejected the application, the SEC never passed on the declaration.

According to the declaration, $6,788,860 of the proceeds of the loan was to be used for construction or investment, $3,245,333 was to be used to pay Federal income tax claims owed by Associated Gas & Electric Corporation, $2,535,416 to pay tax claims owed by General Gas & Electric Corporation, and the remainder was to be used to retire long-term debt and to pay off bank loans.

Bookniga Aide Denies Guilt on Arraignment

Says He Didn't Violate Laws Requiring Alien Agents to Register

Raphael Rush, former vice president of an alleged Soviet propaganda agency, was freed on $1,500 bond late yesterday after he pleaded not guilty in the District Court to charges of criminal conspiracy and violating the laws requiring foreign agents to register with the State Department.

Rush posted bond after he had been locked up in a cell at the District Courthouse for four hours.

Rush was an officer of Bookniga Corporation, alleged subsidiary of a Moscow propaganda agency. He was indicted last month with Morris Liskin, president of the company, and Norman Weinberg, secretary-treasurer. Liskin pleaded guilty to failure to register the company, but denied the alleged conspiracy. Weinberg, like Rush, denied both charges. The trial date has not been set.

Rush appeared before Justice Peyton Gordon yesterday as soon as he arrived from Los Angeles, where he had posted a $5,000 bond for his appearance here. He was accompanied by Carol Weiss King, New York woman attorney who has been counsel for Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader.

Henry G. O'Donnell and Floyd M. Rett, who are investigating foreign spies and propagandists before the District grand jury, urged that a high bond be fixed for Rush, because the man had a passport on which he might flee the country.

"I should think you would pay him a salary to go to Russia," Justice Gordon commented, as he fixed the $1,500 bond.

Handcuffed to a deputy marshal, Rush was taken from Judiciary Square to police headquarters where he was fingerprinted and photographed by Officer Roy Wolf.

Gen. Johnston left a life income of $2,000 a year to Mrs. Lottie L. Turner, 2101 Connecitcut avenue, who was his housekeeper for 14 years. He left $2,000 a year to Miss Edna L. May, 1578 Foxhall road, who was his secretary more than 10 years. Other life incomes were: $1,000 a year to a nephew, Samuel A. Johnston, Pittsburgh; $1,000 a year to Corlies B. St. Elizabeths Needs 1,000 More Beds

Dr. Overholser Makes Report for The 1939 Fiscal Year

St. Elizabeths Hospital, the Federal Government's largest institution for treatment of mental diseases, stands in acute need of at least 1,000 additional beds, according to Dr. Winifred Overholser, its superintendent.

In his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, made public yesterday by the Interior Department, Dr. Overholser said the hospital's steadily increasing population made expanded bed facilities imperative.

St. Elizabeths treated 7,024 patients during the year and its daily average census was 6,108, compared with 5,835 for 1937-38. The number of District residents who were admitted totaled 777, compared with 741 the previous year.

'At least 1,000 beds should be provided to cover immediate needs and to include the replacement of the semipermanent group of buildings which were erected in 1918, with an estimated life of from 15 to 20 years," said Dr. Overholser.

"This semipermanent group which has 530 beds is in a rather dilapidated condition and far from fireproof. The cost of repair is increasing and the hazard from fire is considerable. I consider this recommendation a pressingly urgent one."

No additional beds are provided for, however, in the 1941 budget estimates now awaiting Congressional action.

Dr. Overholser's report also pointed out:

That "shock treatment" for dementia praecox is still no more than promising. After two years, during which 255 patients have been subjected to it, 171—or 76 per cent—still remain in the hospital.

That the beauty parlors "continue to be extremely popular with the patients and apparently have a decidedly beneficial effect on many of them."

That the hospital farm produced 281,092 gallons of milk, 173,642 pounds of fresh pork, 406 bushels of mustard spinach and huge quantities of other foodstuffs during the year. From the various shops came 6,966 pairs of shoes, 2,688 mattresses, 2,435 pairs of bloomers and other apparel.

Dr. Overholser recommended replacement of the present storeroom and laundry buildings and acquisition of 5,000 acres of land to concentrate all farm projects in one place.

In other sections of the departmental report are described the expansion of the National Capital Parks office, establishment of a blood bank at Freedmen's Hospital and the construction of new buildings at Howard University.

Artie Shaw Hurt In Rescue of Girl

Mexico City, Jan. 11 (INS).—Artie Shaw, American orchestra leader, was brought to Mexico City tonight from Acapulco for treatment of injuries sustained when he plunged into the sea to save Anne Chapman, Greenwich, Conn., socialite, from drowning.

Shaw was bathing at the West Coast resort when Miss Chapman, caught in the undertow, screamed for help. The band leader plunged into the water, grabbed Miss Chapman and brought her safely to shore. However, in climbing up the rocks on shore, Shaw slipped and fractured his knee.

Law Lapses, House Seats Safeguarded

Constitutional Reason For Reapportionment Scuttled by Legislators

The reason for the inaction was political—several States would have lost seats to others, unless the size of the House were expanded, and it had already reached, or even exceeded, the maximum workable number of delegates.

To make sure that Congress would never again fail to act on reapportionment, politics or no politics, a section was written into the 1930 census law, making it the automatic duty of the Clerk of the House to carry out reapportionment in the event Congress failed to act. The law was passed in 1929.

It provided that within eight months after the enumeration, the Census Bureau should submit a list to the President, showing how many Representatives each State would have on the basis of a total of 435.

The President, in turn, was to submit this list not less than a week after the convening of the second session of the Seventy-first Congress and each fifth subsequent Congress. If Congress failed to act on it, the Clerk of the House would automatically inform each State of the number of House seats to which it was entitled. The States, in turn, would then provide for the necessary changes, if any.

Written before the "lame duck" amendment, the law contemplated that this list would be submitted to "the second session" of the Seventy-sixth Congress a week after it met—on the first Monday in December, 1940.

The constitutional aendment, however, rendered the law inoperative by an absurdity.

The second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress has met, and will probably adjourn, long before the census count can be completed. And a special section in the law provides that unless the President submits the list within the first week of the session, the law becomes inoperative. Wednesday was the deadline.

It was no mere oversight, however, that resulted in the failure to amend the law to make sense.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, introduced a resolution that merely changed the date for the President's report from the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress to the first session of the Seventy-seventh. The bill passed the Senate by unanimous consent last July.

It has been pigeonholed ever since, however, in the House Census Committee, for a good and simple reason.

Southern Congressmen, who saw the population in their States decline in 1920 and 1930, are afraid the trend has continued. If so, automatic reapportionment would mean fewer Southern Congressmen.

They are warmly supported, also, by a number of Congressmen who represent ridiculously small districts that would probably be changed if any general reapportionment took place. But the small districts are politically very convenient, since they are easily organized and held.

In New York City, for example, Representative Dickstein (Democrat), has a district with all of 90,000 inhabitants. In Brooklyn, however, Representative O'Toole (Democrat), has a constituency of a trifle less than 800,000. Several districts in Queens County, New York, are almost as large. Those in upstate New York are much smaller. Reapportionment would undoubtedly give the city heavier representation, at the expense of the rest of the State.

As the situation now stands, the winners are the vested interests in $10,000-a-year jobs, with representative democracy a poor second. Constitution or no Constitution, reapportionment on the basis of population will take place only if Congress thinks it desirable. The automatic provision of the law has been lost.

Furthermore, a nice question remains whether passage of Vandenberg's resolution at some later date would have any effect in reviving a law now two days dead. Entirely new legislation on apportionment may be required.

31-Word Will Gives Estate to Mrs. Doherty

MRS. HENRY L. DOHERTY,

Papers Place Net Value of Bequest at More Than $1,000,000

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 11.—The utilities and real estate fortune of Henry L. Doherty was left in its entirety to his widow in a hand-written will, remarkably brief, which was filed for probate today.

No value was placed on the estate, but papers filed with the will said the net was "substantially in excess of $1,000,000."

The one-time newsboy and office boy for a Columbus (Ohio) gas company, who became a titan of the public utilities field and of Florida real estate, hotel and resort development, died at 69, two weeks ago in Philadelphia.

Written on Foolscap

The will, by an unnamed lawyer's longhand, on plain, white foolscap, was dated April 22, 1937—a period when Doherty was recurrently ill. Henry D. Williams and Lawrence G. Williams, both of Buffalo, were witnesses.

After the usual formal opening declaration the will stated simply: "I give and bequeath and grant and devise unto my wife, Grace Rardin Doherty, all my estate and property, real, personal and mixed, wheresoever situate, for her own absolutely and forever."

Thus was disposed, in 31 words, a fortune which had its roots in almost every State of the Union and which took a lifetime to accumulate.

The will named Mrs. Doherty, who before their marriage 11 years ago nursed him through a critical illness, as sole executrix. In a petition appended to the will, however, Mrs. Doherty asked the court to name as administrator Temple W. Tutwiler, of Birmingham, Ala., who has offices here.

The petition said Tutwiler had been associated with Doherty in some enterprises.

Mrs. Doherty affirmed that the only other relative of her husband was Margaret Edmunds, of Old Road, Weston, Mass., a daughter of a deceased sister of Doherty's.

Once Worth $100,000,000

Doherty's fortune is almost entirely in securities of Henry L. Doherty & Co., Inc., of which he owned all the stock. This company was set up in 1928, following an attack of arthritis two years before which halted Doherty's more vigorous business activities. Before 1929 Doherty's personal fortune reportedly had a paper value of more than $100,000,000.

Doherty was a native of Columbus, his formal education was meager and his first job paid $2 a week. He was a millionaire at 35, when he came to New York to invade Wall Street and develop his lucrative set-up of public utilities and petroleum concerns.

Doherty was a bachelor until December 31, 1928, when he married the widow of Percy Frank Eames, an official of the International Harvester Co. She was at his bedside when he died.

Hazen to Take Ball Ticket To Roosevelt

Expected to Discuss Reappointment on White House Call

Commissioner Hazen this morning will call at the White House to deliver the first Birthday Ball ticket to the President. He will be accompanied by Corporation Counsel Seal, who is chairman of the ticket committee.

It is likely the topic of Commissioner Hazen's reappointment will be discussed, since his commission expires Tuesday. It has been indicated that the President has no one in mind to succeed the 72-year-old head of the municipal government and that Hazen can remain in office "as long as he likes."

The Commissioner's first appointment was in December, 1933, by President Roosevelt. However, his term officially began in 1934 when his appointment was confirmed by the Senate. The President reappointed him in 1937 for another term of three years. As in all cases of appointments of Commissioners, they remain until a successor is named and confirmed by the Senate.

For more than 50 years a municipal employe, Commissioner Hazen is the center point of the present campaign to reorganize the District government. He appointed the "kitchen cabinet" to draft the necessary legislation for remodeling the government and has been constantly advising the group.

District Surveyor for a number of years, Hazen had served enough time before his appointment as Commissioner to draw full retirement pay.

Farm Ultimatum Threatens Budget

to continue works already started.

Congressional economy advocates, aware of the strength of the powerful farm bloc, immediately pointed out that if parity payments are voted, the issues of raising the public debt limit beyond $45,000,000,000 and boosting taxes would be forced to action in an election-bound Congress.

Mr. Roosevelt's budget contemplates a public debt of $44,931,000,000 at the end of the 1941 fiscal year, leaving only a $69,000,000 margin before the limit set by law is reached.

Administration leaders, seeking to slash the budget, are hoping to avoid both the debt and tax issues at this session. Mr. Roosevelt has asked for $460,000,000 in new national defense taxes and informally has suggested a 10 per cent supertax on incomes. Strong opposition to new taxes, and especially to the supertax proposal, is manifest in both branches.

The supertax proposal, which Mr. Roosevelt employed as Governor of New York, contemplates a 10 per cent increase in the levy on incomes in the calendar years 1939 and 1940, and would raise the $460,000,000, since it is estimated the payments for each of the years will total $2,300,000,000 under present rates.

Spending Riot Feared

The O'Neal demand, calling for $242,000,000 for cotton; $218,000,000 for corn; $121,000,000 for wheat; $14,000,000 for tobacco; $12,000,000 for rice; $200,000,000 for dairy and non-basic products, would so disrupt the budget that economy advocates fear it would plunge Congress into a riot of new spending. It also would put the onus on Congress for boosting the debt.

In the House debate yesterday, Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, declared both Democrats and Republicans had failed to find a solution of the farm problem, and only offered "bigger and better handouts."

"That is not what agriculture wants," Woodrum declared. Describing benefit payments as a "shot of dope" for the farmers, he called for a plan to give farmers a price for their products that will give them "an honest day's living out of an honest day's work."

Calling for economy in government, Woodrum warned the House that the Federal Government is headed into its eleventh year of deficit financing, and declared:

"It is a simple fundamental fact that no individual and no nation can continue to go ahead spending more than he takes in. . . . Envision the day when Congres sits here and appropriates funds that are not in the Treasury and that we cannot borrow and when you have to go to work to increase the national debt limit."

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, following the lead of the House appropriations committee yesterday in restricting supply bills to Mr. Roosevelt's estimates, announced he would seek adoption of a resolution pledging the Senate against boosting estimates.

House Democratic leaders, meanwhile, continued to sit on the Harrison proposal for a joint committee to draft a Congressional budget. Majority Leader Rayburn said the House would carry out its program of passing appropriation bills but intimated the Harrison proposal might be made effective in the coming fiscal year.

Chairman Doughton (Democrat), of the House Ways and Means Committee, informed colleagues that consideration of Mr. Roosevelt's new tax recommendation would be delayed until after the March 15 income tax returns are received.

In the House, Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, asserted that the combined Federal debt—actual and contingent—aggregated $60,000,000,000.

bers of the Commissioners' Traffic Advisory Council.

Another of Holmes' proposals, that the police establish a well-trained and properly equipped accident investigation squad, also will be considered. Washington, it was pointed out, is one of the few cities of consequence without such an organization within its police ranks.

"We are going to do all within our power to make the District a safer place in which to drive an automobile during 1940," Brown declared. "We hope to establish a program under which we may proudly point to a safety record second to no other city at the end of the year."

Will They Wait in Vain for Rescue of Trapped Miners?

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Nora Lester (left) and Pattie Stacy, wife and sister-in-law, respectively, of a missing miner, await word of rescue operations in the blast-tor n Bartley, W. Va., mine

Bartley Mine Disaster Second Major One Since April, 1938

McDowell County Area Considered Most Dangerous Bituminous Section Because of Explosive Gas Produced

United States mining experts had reason to hope that major mine explosion disasters were things of the past until they heard yesterday the story of the blast-torn mine at Bartley, W. Va., where 91 men are feared to have perished.

From July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, not one major explosion-disaster occurred in a coal mine in the United States, records of the United States Bureau of Mines reveal. Not since 1880, the year in which mine accident reports were first tabulated, has the industry compiled such a record.

But there is another side to the story of the hazards of coal mining in the United States, a story not revealed in the accounts of ghastly death of men entombed nor told in news pictures of grief-stricken widows and children.

1,000 Miners Killed Annually

In the year when, from the standpoint of the occurrence of major mine explosions, mining in the United States appeared to be safest, coal miners continued to die at the rate of more than 1,000 a year.

In 1938 the Bureau of Mines recorded 1,103 accident deaths. For 1939 experts estimate the death toll at 1,106. Thus, although the death rate for every million tons of coal produced has been almost halved in the last three decades, coal mining remains a hazardous occupation, bureau officials agree.

The Bureau of Mines classifies as a major explosion one that kills five or more men.

In the calendar year 1939 there was only one major mine explosion, but the period of comparative safety from mine blasts goes back to April 22, 1938. From that day until last Wednesday United States mines had experienced only one major explosion. That was on July 14, 1939, when 28 men died in a Kentucky mine.

Several Accident Causes

What killed coal miners in this period were, in the majority, accidents the bureau lists as resulting from "falls," "haulage" failures, electrocution and the careless handling of explosives.

Wednesday's disaster, bureau officials pointed out, occurred in an area where coal mining is more dangerous than in any other bituminous coal section of the United States. The mines in McDowell County, where the Bartley mine is located, produce an explosive gas—the dreaded methane—in greater quantities than any other United States bituminous mine.

On the other hand operators of the Bartley mine utilized precaution measures that should have made it one of the safest in the area, it was said.

Seven of the bureau's nine safety experts were sent to the scene of the disaster with rescue equipment yesterday. Bureau engineers and safety men will begin an investigation of the cause of the disaster, now a bureau mystery.

Rescuers Burrow Toward 87 in Mine

a crew came up mine officials said the workers were making "good progress."

Mother of 4 Feeds Rescuers

Onlookers and rescue squads were fed from a south kitchen manned by Mrs. Alonzo Barnett, 21-year-old mother of four children, whose husband was one of those still in the mine.

The bodies recovered from the pit were identified as those of:

Roy Hyatt, 32, motorman, married, four children.

Roy Evans, 41, motorman, married, four children.

Charley Moffitt, 42, Negro, married, four children.

One man still unidentified.

More than 2,000 persons gathered about the mouth of the mine.

Workers said they were handicapped considerably by dead air and had to build brattices as they went along to protect themselves. One shift reported penetrating through rock and debris about halfway to the trapped men.

State mine department officials said the ventilating system had to be rebuilt as the crews moved ahead.

L. C. Collins, 48, member of the first rescue team, told today the story of the crew's work.

"We went down the shaft," he said. "We went to the second overshaft where it was blown out. There was planks and slate and stuff all over the main entry.

"We built a brattice. We moved rock, and there was plenty of it in that entry.

"In the same entry, close to a quarter of a mile from the shaft, we found two men. Both were flat on their backs, side by side. They were against a slate fall.

"We picked them up and wrapped them in canvass and carried them back about 300 feet. We left them at the overshaft.

"That is as far as we got. We came back out and another shift relieved us. We had to go slowly, because of dead air."

Miss Charlotte Johnson, Red Cross disaster relief worker, left Washington yesterday en route to Bartley, W. Va., to aid families of more than 60 miners entombed by the explosion there.

W. A. Buchanan, chairman of the McDowell County (W. Va.) Red Cross, informed national headquarters yesterday that his organization had been operating a canteen for the rescue workers.

WPA Hits Back at Job Hunters

of any one of these tax eaters.

"I called Mr. Paul Edwards, who has the doubtful privilege of being the head of the WPA for the District of Columbia, and asked for an appointment with him for one of my constituents. I was told by his secretary that Mr. Edwards was too big a man and too busy a man to be engaged in any such matters.

"I told her I wanted an appointment with him, and she said if Mr. Edwards could find a vacant place on his calendar he might grant me an audience."

Last night Byrns modified this report of the incident by saying that his secretary had done the telephoning and he had listened in on an extension line.

Byrns told the House that "the time has come to curb the insolence, the arrogance, and the impudence of these persons in the Federal employ who seem to think that they are masters of the people who are paying their salaries instead of their servants.

Edwards Pleads Absence

"I wish to say that impudence to us is impudence to our constituents. I for one have had a bellyfull of it and I am willing to join with any other member of Congress to do anything and everything possible to curb this at the first possible moment."

Edwards, who was first notified of Byrns' call after his attack, explained that Miss Elsie Carter, his secretary, received the call while he was out of the office.

"Miss Carter offered her immediate cooperation," Edwards said, "and suggested how the matter could be considered very quickly through our employment office.

"The person who said she represented Mr. Byrns, then became angry and demanded to know whether I would see Mr. Byrns. My secretary asked if Mr. Byrns wished to see me. The only answer was a slammed telephone.

"I regret such a trifle might be magnified to members of Congress into a general criticism of all executives of the Government who are charged with administering the laws enacted by Congress.

"My office always is open to members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, and I am always personally available not only to Senators and members of the House, but also to their representatives.

"My record in the WPA in Washington, as well as in Massachusetts and in New York, will show that my office is conducted in a democratic manner—which is the absolute opposite of insolence and arrogance toward anyone."

Edwards, who took the office under a recess appointment on September 15, has not yet been confirmed by the Senate. His nomination was presented by President Roosevelt last Thursday.

Japanese See Hostility in U.S. Navy Plans

Leaders 'Concerned;' Press Predicts Race In Warship Building

By the Associated Press

Tokyo, Jan. 11.—The Japanese navy and press today attacked the proposed expansion of the United States Navy and criticized its proposal to spend $4,000,000 on the military development of the Island of Guam.

A spokesman for the navy, although less forthright than the press, made plain Japanese anxiety over the American $1,300,000,000 naval expansion program.

"Naturally," he said, "the Japanese navy feels great concern. It (the building program) apparently is designed to maintain the United States' superior ratio even after lapse of the Washington treaty."

Naval Race Predicted

This treaty, which established a 5-5-3 capital ship ratio among the United States, Great Britain and Japan, respectively, expired January 1, 1937, after it had been denounced by Japan.

The spokesman said construction of 52,000-ton warships by the United States would "concern all naval powers." Admiral Harold R. Stark, United States chief of naval operations, has said this might be an early development.

Asked whether the American program meant that the Japanese navy would be increased, the spokesman replied: "You can imagine what action would take place."

The newspaper Asahi was more direct.

"If the United States, in disregard of the fundamentally peaceful program of the Japanese navy, seeks to maintain its unjustifiable superiority," said Asahi, "Japan, in accordance with her policy of permitting no aggression, obviously would be compelled to strengthen her fleet sufficiently to meet the American menace."

Hostility Charged

Other papers took the same line. Nichi Nichi said:

"The United States has merely indicated in undisguised terms its glaring hostility toward Japan."

The United States Navy's proposal to take $4,000,000 from the appropriations for the Hawaiian naval district and use it for the military development of Guam, thereby avoiding the need for legislative authorization, also drew fire in Tokyo.

The naval spokesman said that this was "not a graceful attitude" in view of Congress' previous rejection of plans to fortify Guam.

Unverified reports are that Japan is building from four to six capital ships, some of more than 35,000 tons. Japan declined last year to assure other naval powers that she was not building ships of more than that tonnage.

Nazi Planes Scout 400 Miles of Britain

bank of the Tyne nine miles up the river.

That maneuver brought out a squadron of fighters who swooped up to attack them from below but before contact could be made the planes had made off northward for a last glimpse of the docks before they were finally driven to sea by the coastal defenses.

One group of German fighters attacked a trawler off the Scottish coast but was driven off after damaging the ship with bomb splinters and machine gun bullets.

Another bomber attacked a small steamer several miles from shore. The vessel burst into flames and the crew escaped in life boats. The attacking plane was driven off by British fighters.

An air ministry communique later in the day stated "enemy aircraft crossed our coast near Newcastle."

The Germans did not risk more than one plane near the London docks, where half of the nation's food supply is unloaded.

Three Bombers Over Rosyth

The plane nosed into the Thames Estuary at about 25,000 feet—a mere speck in the sky. Defense batteries opened up on it first from the Kentish coast, but it kept going toward London until antiaircraft guns from both the Kent and Essex sides of the river started puffing up smoke rings all around it.

Three bombers appeared near the southeast coast of Scotland, but were driven out to sea by Royal Air Force fighters. Three others flirted around the Firth of Forth and Rosyth, site of a British naval base. The largest German air attack on England occurred there early in the war.

The Germans evidently were allowed to pass along the southeast coast without being attacked. The air ministry made no report about planes in this area, but officials in more than one town confirmed that two large Dornier bombers flew over at a height of 20,000 feet.

Reports from the East Anglia area confirmed that the coastal defense went into action there.

Today's raids coincided with rumors in diplomatic quarters here of a possible German attack on British naval bases this month.

The papers tomorrow, for instance, are warning the people not to miss the moral of today's activity:

"Where few planes may come one day," the Daily Herald says, "many may come another day. . . . Do not let us slacken our preparations or relax our precautions."

Bomber Scuttled

Copenhagen, Jan. 11 (INS).—A German aviation crew of four men tonight brought their big bombing plane to an emergency landing at Skaerbaek, South Jutland, then scuttled their craft by fire before Danish authorities could seize it. The German aviators were interned.

It was believed the plane belonged to the German air fleet which today executed a reconnoitering expedition and bombing attacks on British ships along Britain's eastern coast.

Early today this German fleet was seen from the Danish Island of Romo flying out over the North Sea in the direction of Britain.

Belgians Fire at Planes

Brussels, Jan. 11 (INS).—Belgian antiaircraft batteries at various points today fired upon German planes flying over Belgian territory. A protest will be made to Berlin.

One German plane, which made a forced landing in Belgium, was interned with its crew.

Religious Leaders Discuss Plans to Rally Missionaries

Harris & Ewing

Members of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America conferred yesterday with President Roosevelt on plans to rally Protestant missionaries in a spiritual drive for peace at a Christian foreign service convocation to be organized later this year under the auspices of the mission conference. At the White House were (left to right) James M. Speers, treasurer of the foreign missions conference; the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and Emory Ross, executive secretary of the conference's planning committee

Gifts Pouring Into Finnish Legation Here

Many Send Money; Missouri Legion Post Donates Horse

"I am inclosing a money order for $10. I know it is not much, but I hope it will buy the winning bullet."

This is the refrain that each mail delivery brings to the Finnish Legation's chancery on Wyoming avenue. From 50 to 100 letters arrive each day. Some bring checks or currency; all offer fervent encouragement for the defenders of Finland.

Nonnegotiable gifts range from a cavalry horse to a Colt automatic. The horse is reported on its way from Paris, Mo., where American Legionnaires decided they wanted "to do something for Finland." Legation officials are "deeply touched," but don't quite know where they will keep the animal. The Missouri Legion post also is sending $51.

A man in Cambridge, Mass., recalling a "delightful" tour of Finland by seaplanes three years ago, sent the pistol and $55 for purchase of ammunition.

"Were it not for the fact that my wife and child are dependent upon me," he concluded, "I would volunteer my services to Finland as an air pilot."

A Swedish-American now living in California, first Swedish officer to volunteer for the Finnish army in its war of independence 22 years ago, wrote with regret that "age and ill health make it impossible for me to go again."

He had done "the next best thing," he said, by sending his son, a lieutenant in the Swedish air force, to volunteer as a pilot in Finland, while he himself was working through the Hoover relief fund. His letter ended, "God save Finland!"

Another letter from California, received in yesterday's late mail, suggested the recruiting in America of a "Knute Rockne Battalion" of sportsmen to fight for Finland. The writer said he and four friends, all between 25 and 30 years old and graduates of the R. O. T. C., were ready to go at once "to help a sportsmanlike nation preserve her honor and traditions."

Risto Solanko, secretary of the legation, said he was "more grateful than I could tell you" for such evidence of sympathy. He pointed out, however, that American law forbids enlistment in foreign armies and that the legation can give no encouragement to Americans who wish to volunteer.

The first sample of "a new kind of chain letter" reached the legation yesterday. The sponsor wrote five of his friends, asking each of them to send a dime to the legation.

"We all think the Finns are a bunch of grand guys who are doing a beautiful job under serious handicaps," the message says. "Give them a hand."

In a postscript to Minister Hjalmar Procope, the writer, who lives in Raleigh, N. C., expressed hope that "you will receive such a blizzard of dimes that the entire Soviet will be completely and permanently snowed under—Go to it, Finns."

Another friend of Finland, writing from the Canal Zone, suggested that metal from Soviet planes brought down by the Finns be shipped to this country and converted into medals for sale at $1 apiece. Figures of David and Goliath would make an appropriate design for the medal, he thought.

Solanko's Washington physician, rendering a bill for treatment of the diplomat's children during December, wrote across the statement, "Please use for the defense of Finland."

Legation officials say they wish it understood that "we are making no campaign and that these offerings are entirely spontaneous."

The letters from Americans are making "a tremendous impression" in Finland, according to Solanko. Excerpts find their way into Finnish newspapers and up to the front lines. "It is a fine thing for our soldiers to know they have the civilized world behind them," he said.

Hull Sets Off Battle on Trade Act

nurtured, an ultimate peace conference will have another alternative—an example of a liberal commercial policy for friendly intercourse between nations and a factor for lasting peace.

"We should organize now to try to present economic anarchy, Hull said, in response to a question by McCormack. "We can pave the way during war for resumption of liberal trade policies."

Earlier he testified that the trade agreement attempt to scale down international trade barriers and reverse the "fatal trend" toward narrow, nationalistic economic policies, was only partly complete when the war broke.

While hostilities proceed, he said, the trade program must be used "to defend our export trade from the inroads of war-time controls and dislocations." When the war ends, he said, the act can serve as a bulwark against resumption of policies blockading trade channels, and leading toward "regimentation, economic distress, the dole on an ever-growing scale, social instability, and recurrent warfare."

He presented to the committee two "basic propositions," which he said were validated by the experience of the last two decades.

"The first of these is that our Nation, and every nation, can enjoy sustained prosperity only in a world which is at peace," he said. "The second it that a peaceful world is possible only when there exists for it a solid economic foundation, an indispensable part of which is active and mutually beneficial trade among the nations."

Defending his program's domestic effects, Hull slapped out at its critics. He said in his entire experience he does not recall "a more flagrant and unscrupulous suppression and misuse of material facts on an issue."

Farm Income Increased

The facts are, he said, that the trade agreements program was a factor in raising farm income from the 1932 low of $4,700,000,000 to $7,600,000,000 in 1938.

He said there was no evidence of material injury to farmers or to any other group of producers, resulting from the act. Testifying that the program has expanded markets for all groups of producers, he said that in 1937 and 1938 America's sales abroad exceeded imports by an average of $700,000,000, and were approximately the same in 1939.

Citing average figures for 1934 and 1935, and similar figures for 1937 and 1938, he said exports in all foreign countries increased by $1,000,000,000, or 46 per cent. The role played in this by the trade agreements program, he said, was indicated by the fact that "our exports to trade agreement countries rose during this period, by 61 per cent, while our exports to non-agreement countries increased by only 38 per cent."

Hull asked for a straight, 3-year extension of the act in its present form, declaring the opposition proposal to subject the agreements to Senate ratification would lead to minority filibusters and damage the program.

Republicans had prepared for his coming by organizing a special 10-man minority committee, and four of its members—Treadway, Crother of New York, Knutson of Minnesota, and Reed of New York, proceeded immediately to cross-examination.

Knutson challenged Hull's assertions that the program promoted world peace, and asked: "How many nations were at war when the program was passed?"

"I'd rather refer you to the historians," Hull replied.

Knutson said he recalled no wars between the Fordney-McCumber tariff act of 1922 and the 1934 passage of the reciprocal trade act. Hull said he thought the act had induced "many nations to abandon many discriminatory factors that lead to war."

Knutson claimed farm income had risen to $6,300,000,000 by 1934, before the act's enactment, and declared crop subsidies and export bounties contributed to that. When the Minnesotan objected that Hull was attempting unfairly to indict Republicans by referring to money "recklessly" loaned abroad in the 'twenties, Hull apologized:

"I'm sorry. I hoped you wouldn't be sensitive about that."

When Treadway took over the question, he said Republican members were "handicapped" by not having the statistics and machinery available to the State Department.

"You can have anything we've got," said Hull.

"But your statistics are all on your side," replied Treadway.

The Massachusetts Republican complained that industrial New England had been seriously hurt by the agreements program. He took issue with a newspaper clipping produced by Hull, quoting the New England council as saying business there was much improved. Hull replied that he had best debate that with the New England council.

The secretary accused Treadway of "running true to his old form" when he said he would produce witnesses from the council to refute the report, and again asked that "politics" be forgotten in what he repeated was a "grave emergency."

Treadway complained that the trade act always was presented for extension under "emergency" conditions, and said one had to consider politics with an election coming on and constituents to satisfy.

"If you are elected President next November, I will then admit that reciprocal trade agreements are fine things," smiled Treadway.

Crowther charged that under the program tariffs had been reduced 40 per cent by a "piecemeal, gnawing" method that had never been submitted to the voters and lacked specific congressional approval.

The New York Republican said he favored "reciprocity" in trade, but "reciprocity that would not compete with products produced by us."

Argentine Talks Brought Up

"It's easy for you to take a broad, statesmanlike attitude," said Crowther. "But I'm provincial to be considerate of my own people."

"And your people are the first in our minds in our efforts to be of service," replied Hull.

Reed asked if recent cessation of trade negotiations with Argentina was not "temporary" with the intention of resuming them later. Hull denied this. He said there was no "understanding about a future resumption" and said the negotiations adjourned "sine die."

Asked what was the "stumbling block," Hull said he regarded Argentina as one of the "most powerful nations in this hemisphere" and the negotiations had been prosecuted along lines of those reached with other South American countries. But he said the two nations disagreed over the "entire question of quotas" and said financial and exchange policies were a further factor.

Reed especially protested reduction of the excise tax on oil imports from ½ to ¼ cent a gallon in the Venezuelan pact, although the excise was extended four times by Congress. Hull replied that the oil importations had not hurt domestic producers, but the State Department had won "valuable concessions" by permitting them.

When Reed likewise complained of a long list of imported Canadian agricultural products, Hull said they "meant very little to this country" and by permitting some farm products to come in the United States sold Canada $200,000,000 more than it bought last year.

At the close, Chairman Doughton invited Hull to return today, and the Secretary said he "would be glad to continue in a spirit of cooperation with Congress."

some executions.

Displacement of Mikhail M. Kaganovich from his key post as head of the aviation industry commissariat was linked by Scandinavian observers with the reports that the Red army and allied services were being reorganized.

Russia announced last night that Kaganovich had been "transferred to another post."

Copenhagen, Jan. 11 (INS).—Joseph Stalin was reported tonight to be personally directing an iron-handed "purge" of Red army officers and government officials to reorganize and bolster Soviet Russia's sagging drive against Finland.

The officer who had been in charge of supplying the Red troops already was said to have been shot by a firing squad, presumably because he failed to prevent the cutting of the Leningrad-Murmansk Railway and other communications lines in Russia by Finnish planes and ski patrols.

Deputies Cheer As Herriot Lashes Russia

One-Time Advocate of Alliance Praises Finns As Civilization's Van

By Lansing Warren

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Jan. 11.—An ovation burst from all seats in the chamber and its galleries today when Edouard Herriot, president of the chamber, read out a burning condemnation of the German-Soviet conspiracy and afterwards in eloquent terms exalted the valor of Finland.

The words were the more significant, coming from the man who had dreamed of a Franco-Soviet alliance.

Communists, whose presence in the chamber yesterday gave rise to a demonstration of internal bitterness, were absent from their seats today.

The bill for recall of the Communist deputies who have failed to renounce the leadership of Moscow by January 9 makes provision for a ten-days' delay for those Communists who are serving with the colors.

Approved by Socialists

The bill was approved 69 to 38 by the Socialist group of the chamber, meeting late today.

Support of the Socialists, who were allied in the past with the Communists and still are the largest party in the chamber, apparently assured the passage of the measure.

Virtually all other parties represented were expected to back the measure. It will come before the deputies for debate next Tuesday.

The chamber's executive committee voted to ask the defense ministry to extend the leaves of all deputies now serving in the armed forces so that they might participate in the debate.

Herriot's address was a powerful expression of French opinion on the European struggle. He quoted President Roosevelt's address to Congress, saying that France was fighting "to defend liberty, freedom of conscience and moral rules and to defend democracy as the best form of government that has been created by humanity to date."

Of Finland he declared:

"Gentlemen, far in the north a little country is fighting with a heroism that has astonished the world against a regime that has assumed the sorry work of crushing weak peoples and finishing off injured nations.

"Finland is not only an advance guard of civilization but her victory, as pure as the snows of her Arctic fields, will symbolize the triumph of mind over matter and of human values over brutality. The French and British governments have already proclaimed that the interests of our own cause themselves require us to bring Finland all the aid within our power."

British Entente Cheered

When Herriot spoke of the intimate collaboration of the French and British empires he was cheered again.

He spoke then of the sacrifices that the French people must make behind their defending lines and the resistance they must make against the forces which were trying to disintegrate their union. The Allied war aims, he said, had been ably defined by both President Roosevelt and the Pope.

"International law," he said, "must be re-established upon moral law and must also be guaranteed by a definite system of security. France cannot raise new generations to send them to battle every 20 years. It would be to despair of the future of humanity if people who ask only to work in security must be prepared at any moment to rise in alarm because of the caprices of some petty tyrant."

Herriot exclaimed that Germany and Russia "wished to put all free peoples in a chain gang and subjugate all the neutral nations."

In the Senate Jules Jeanenney was re-elected president by an almost unanimous vote. Jean Valadier, World War Premier Viviani's former private secretary; Paul Jourdain, who was captured by the Germans in the World War, and Manuel Fourcade, former president of the Paris Bar Association, were the new men elected as vice presidents.

News of Capital Night Clubs

VANYA BARRYMORE-MUNI. A leather-faced old Russian general lumbers around the Troika floor like a cabhorse with the heaves. He has a front elevation like a trench mortar, he creaks in every joint, he looks as though he'd been fighting Finns for 50 years and lost every battle. He leers blearily at the ringside pretties . . . And this strange creature, believe it or disbelieve it, is Vanya—handsome and youthful Vanya, whose brilliant Cossack dancing brings a storm of applause every night in the season . . . Vanya's tour de force in character acting is part of the "Love Down the Ranks" skit in Troika's new revue. It's pure "Chauve Souris" and as fine acting as you'll seen on anybody's stage.

THE WHIRLING PLATTERS. Glen Hardman and Alice O'Connell, of the Neptune Room, will make some new records for Columbia in a couple of weeks.

THE G-MEN! "You can't fool J. Edgar Hoover," said Arno desperately . . . "I'm not thinking of fooling him, just of setting up an alibi. Any waiter could have told me instead of you. Besides, he won't care any way," said your correspondent with exasperation . . . "You're going to get me into a bucket of trouble," moaned Arno. He called Headwaiter Frank who listened seriously, then rushed right over to Mr. Hoover. The Head G-man grinned cheerily across the room indicating all was hokus-dokus . . . And that, dear readers, is why we can tell you that J. Edgar Hoover's favorite request numbers are "Serenade in the Night," "Deep Purple" and "Kiss Me Again," that he often dines at the Trans-Lux Hour Glass because he enjoys the soft music of Arno's Hawaiians.

FASHION CRUISES. Nifty togs for the Southern beaches and Caribbean cruising will be shown at a style parade in the Shoreham Blue Room tonight. There'll be a repeat at the "Fashion Luncheon" tomorrow . . . And down at the Pall Mall Room they'll be another style show luncheon tomorrow. Plus entertainment by the Arthur Murray Dancers.

EVENING IN PAREE. The new La Salle Versailles has taken rank in the top flight of the town's snootier and most successful spots . . . It's crowded nightly with diplomats, debutantes of 1939-40 vintage, dinner jacketed young men.

Rainbow Room. That very odd ballad that Lew Berman is using in place of his "Hills of West Virginia." He says it's really about someone's wedding gown. He says.

Mayflower Lounge. "Getting Sentimental," with Billie Bailey doing the sentimentalizing. It's the song she really loves to sing.

Madrillon. "Swingin' a Dream" with Mary La Marr giving it a great varnishing. The best song from the show of the same name.

BIRTHDAY BALL SONG. Anchor Room's Matt Windsor is busily writing a song in honor of the President's Birthday Ball. He finds the lyrics harder to do than the music.

FALSE TEETH
That Loosen Need Not Embarrass
Many wearers of false teeth have suffered real embarrassment because their plate dropped, slipped or wabbled at just the wrong time. Do not live in fear of this happening to you. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH, the alkaline (non-acid) powder, on your plates. Holds false teeth more firmly, so they feel more comfortable. Does not sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug store.—Adv.

3 Die, 8 Hurt As Mine Sinks British Tanker

Vessel Almost in Sight of Port When Disaster Strikes

(Copyright by the New York Times)

London, Jan. 11.—Six weeks out from South America with a cargo of oil, the 7,267-ton British tanker Eloso was blown up on the west coast of England today almost in sight of port. Three of her crew of 36 were killed and 8 seriously injured.

The vessel was part of a convoy and warships picked up survivors. The crew blamed a German mine for the blast.

The explosion wrecked the forecastle, which caved in on the sleeping men below.

Officers and men from the 7,834-ton German steamship Ussukuma were landed at Capetown today from a British warship, Associated Press reports stated, and will be interned in the interior of South America.

Naval sources said the Ussukuma was scuttled by her crew after interception by British warships off the African coast on December 6. Previous reports that the warships had frustrated efforts to scuttle the ship were described as premature.

The 17-man crew of the British ship Leonard Pearce, 1,571 tons, was rescued by a pilot boat after the ship sank following a collision with another vessel early today.

British Cruiser at Rio

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Jan. 11 (U.P.). The 6,985-ton British cruiser Ajax put into port here today for a 24-hour visit, and its presence in Brazilian waters was believed responsible for delaying the departure of three German merchantmen.

It was the first visit of the Ajax to Rio de Janeiro since the sea battle off Montevideo on December 13, in which the Ajax, the Achilles and the Exeter defeated the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee.

Iceberg Sinks Nazi Vessel

Reykjavik, Iceland, Jan. 11 (U.P.).—The German steamer Bahia Blanca, which sailed from Rio de Janeiro in an effort to return to Germany, struck an iceberg today and sank 60 miles northwest of the west coast of Iceland.

The trawler Hufstein picked up the crew of 62 and landed them at the village of Hafnarfjoerdur, near here.

French Report Good Seizure

Paris, Jan. 11 (AP).—The French blockade ministry announced today that France and Britain together have intercepted since the beginning of the war nearly 1,000,000 tons of merchandise bound to or from Germany.

Russians Attack To Divert Finns

commander, Col. Vinagradov, into believing he was facing a large force. That night, in the darkness, the Finn force moved northward and hurled itself at the 163d division.

For three days the Finns hammered at the 163d. They cut it down in the woods, drove it out to the frozen surface of Lake Kianta and there machine gunned it from the shores and bombed it from the air. The forty-fourth division, only a few miles to the south, held tight. Col. Vinagradov had no orders from the Red army headquarters, and his men, fighting in a strange land and under strange conditions, were helpless to assist him.

They could not patrol on skis and bring back news of the battle between the Finns and the 163d, for their skis—which they did not know how to use—were still in the supply wagons and in their pockets were 277-page books on "How to Ski."

The 163d division was smashed to pieces while the forty-fourth division stood by with its forty-three tanks, ten armored cars and 17,000 men. But the forty-fourth division's turn came soon. On New Year's Eve the Finns brought up a force on the forty-fourth division's flank, traveling on a secret road which they had built in peacetime.

The Finnish commander sent one detachment toward the frontier to cut the Russian's line of communication, block its retreat and prevent reinforcements from reaching the Forty-fourth. He sent another to destroy a bridge between the Red division and the Soviet border. He placed a small force in front of the enemy and the main body of Finns crept through the woods and opened fire on the Russian division's flank.

For there days the two armies fought, and the Reds fought better than they ever had been known to fight in this war. The Russian commander sent a radio appeal for help on the third night. The Finnish radio heard the answer. Red army headquarters felt the commander of the Forty-fourth Division had enough troops to win.

On the fourth day two companies of Russian field police came up, but they were stopped by the Finns at the border. Then two companies of sappers and two of infantry attempted to join the Forty-fourth. None got through. Late that afternoon the Soviet commander ordered a retreat.

The Red division never got going. The bridge was out, and tanks destroyed by grenades blocked the road. The Russians took to the woods. From then on it was a slaughter. The Finns cut them down mercilessly, and freezing winter nights did the rest.

Two Attacks Repulsed

Helsinki, Jan. 11 (AP).—Finland today reported that two Soviet attacks had been repulsed, one in the extreme northern Petsamo region and the other near Salla on the east central front.

The Finnish daily communique reported there was nothing new on the other fronts.

Scandinavian newspapers described a "sled tank," which Finnish troops have captured on the eastern front recently, as "Stalin's secret weapon," but said the Finns discounted its usefulness.

The speedy tanks had an armored body mounted on skis and driven by an airplane motor and propeller. Its light armor, difficult steering and nonadaptability to broken terrain were said by the Finns to be weaknesses however.

Coast Attack Reported

Helsinki, Jan. 11 (U.P.).—Streets of Helsinki resounded today with what appeared to be coastal artillery fire, indicating a Russian attack on Finland's gulf fortresses.

Heavy detonations, believed to be the fire of Finland's large caliber coastal defense guns, were heard distinctly in Helsinki for several minutes this afternoon, coming from the south. No official explanation was given for the firing.

No air raid alarm was sounded, indicating that the firing was not due to planes in the vicinity of Helsinki.

Dr. Carrel To Aid France By Research

DR. ALEXIS CARREL

By G. B. Lal

International News Service Science Editor

New York, Jan. 11.—Dr. Alexis Carrel, Nobel prize winner and member emeritus of Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, has been appointed to the staff of the French ministry of health for military medical research, it was learned today.

According to a Paris communication to the editor of Science, official organ of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Dr. Carrel is expected to remain on his new job for the duration of the war.

However, authentic sources in New York tonight disclosed that Dr. Carrel desires to return to New York as soon as possible to continue research he has in progress.

Meager information indicates Dr. Carrel will seek new methods of treating victims of modern warfare.

The problem of rapidly controlling "shock" caused by bleeding is of most critical importance in saving soldiers' lives. Dr. Carrel is one of the leading investigators of such "surgical shock."

It is not expected that Dr. Carrel, in his present position, will make any practical use of the studies made by him, with Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, in the culture of whole organs.

In the World War Dr. Carrel served in the military medical service of France, developing a chemical solution for healing of wounds and prevention of serious infection.

Finns Fear Victory May Discourage Aid

By Harold Denny.

Helsinki, Jan. 11.—Finnish national joy after the second big victory of the Suomussalmi region—the destruction of the Forty-fourth Red Army division—is tempered by fear in higher quarters that succeeding Finnish successes will persuade other countries that Finland can defeat the Russians unaided and cause them to withhold or reduce their aid to Finland.

This view was repeated officially today by Foreign Minister V. A. Tanner in a brief interview.

"This is a great victory—the greatest Finland has ever won in this or other wars," he said. "But I hope this victory will not halt the efforts to help us which are being made in other countries. We need them. We need volunteers, especially, and I hope that now they will come all the more readily since they can see they now have a chance to show victories and not only defeats."

The "Little Bertha," which has been shelling Viipuri intermittently for the last few weeks, is in operation again. Finnish officers believe a whole Soviet battery is firing from a distance of about 20 miles, throwing incendiary shells.

On Monday night they set three houses afire and Tuesday night they set fire to a school being used as a military hospital. The city is almost uninhabited now.

Russian airplanes today dropped bombs on the Tamissare, Ekenaes and Stroemfors districts. Six women were wounded.

Canada Plans $200,000,000 3¼% War Loan

Subscriptions to Be Opened Monday Morning in Ottawa

Ottawa, Jan. 11 (Canadian Press).—Subscriptions will be opened Monday morning on a $200,000,000 Dominion war loan bearing 3¼ per cent interest.

Details of the loan, which have been awaited with much interest by Americans who have billions invested in Dominion subsidiary companies, were announced tonight on behalf of Finance Minister Ralston. Officials emphasized that subscriptions are voluntary and offered only to Canadian investors.

The proceeds will be used to finance war expenditures which it is estimated will cost Canada $1,000,000 a day for the first full year of the war.

In addition to the $200,000,000 in new money, the finance minister will have discretion to accept applications for conversion of Dominion of Canada 3 per cent bonds maturing March 1, 1940, into an equal par value of the new issue. The 3 per cent bond issue was for $115,000,000.

Dated February 1, 1940, the bonds will mature February 1, 1952, but by a system of annual drawings by lot they are callable in five equal sections beginning February 1, 1948.

The bonds will be offered at par and will not be tax-free as were most of the six War and Victory bond issues sold in the World War.

To encourage popular distribution, bearer bonds will be in denominations of $50, $100, $500 and 1,000, and registered bonds in larger denominations.

3 Nazi Planes Reported Shot Down in France

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Jan. 11.—After a brief thaw, frost again gripped the Western Front with activity in the air on both sides. Fighters clashed several times today. The French reported two machines were brought down yesterday and one today all within their lines.

Ground patrols also have been active between the Rhine and the Moselle and the French claimed more prisoners. Artillery action was intensified.

Military sources said French advance guards penetrated German lines.

DNB, official German News Agency, said a French company broke the German line on Kreuzberg, east of Forbach, but was driven back.

The Allied high command's morning communique said:

"Nothing to report during the night. Two enemy planes were brought down within our lines January 10."

The German high command claimed two opposing planes were shot down while a German plane was destroyed in a crash while chasing the invaders.

"This collaboration has the essential task of defending the common interests of the neutral Nordic states. I earnestly hope it will be of equally strong service to the cause of general peace.

"In conformity with the profound desire of my people, I am, as always, ready to contribute toward efforts for the re-establishment of peace."

Meanwhile, Sweden's record-breaking defense budget for the coming fiscal year was presented to the Parliament.

Nazi Consuls Confer Here on Stranded Columbus Crew

A score of Adolf Hitler's highest ranking consular officers on American duty yesterday left a Mayflower Hotel luncheon conference via freight elevator to avoid attentions of the press.

Seven German consuls from key cities in this country attended the meeting called by Dr. Hans Thomsen, charge d'affaires for the embassy here.

It was the largest gathering of Nazi consular agents in Washington since outbreak of the European war.

One attache indicated the group would discuss arrangements for return to the Reich of seamen from the scuttled liner Columbus. Otherwise, he said, the conference was occupied with "routine reports" from the consular officers.

Several of the consuls left by plane for their posts, it was stated, while others are staying here "a day or two."

Capt. Fritz Wiedemann, close personal friend of Hitler and his superior officer during the World War, flew here from San Francisco for the meeting.

As German consul general in the California city, he is expected to arrange accommodations for the Columbus crew while they await passage across the Pacific. The seamen of military age, numbering more than 400, will be scattered among several ships and sent to Asia for the trip overland to Germany via the trans-Siberian railroad.

Other consuls at the meeting were Dr. George Gyssling, from Los Angeles; Baron Edgar Spiegel, New Orleans; Dr. Johannes Borchers, New York City; Dr. Emil Baer, Chicago; Dr. Karl Kapp, Cleveland, and Heinrich Schafhausen, Philadelphia.

Icebound

For the second time in four years ice jams are causing serious trouble in Chesapeake Bay. The upper sections of the bay, indeed, are now frozen solid and the approach to the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal has been cut off. On the lower bay floating ice has made navigation too hazardous for any but large vessels. Thus the oystering industry has been brought to a complete standstill.

Unless the thaw comes soon there is danger that some of the islands will become completely icebound, as has been the case in other severe winters. This may eventually mean a shortage of food, since the islanders are largely dependent upon the mainland for supplies. A few days ago the residents of Smith Island sent out a radio appeal for fresh milk for their children. This was answered on Tuesday when Coast Guard vessels succeeded in cutting a channel for the regular mail boat from Crisfield.

Conditions as yet are less acute than was the case in the difficult winter of 1936, when an impending famine on Smith Island and Tangier Island was not a matter of idle rumor. That year groceries and medicines were being dropped on the islands by planes. That was also the year in which Maj. Enoch B. Carey, then head of the Maryland State Police, led a relief expedition across the ice to Tangier Island, which cost the life of one of his sergeants.

A prolonged freeze always means greatly increased hardships for the Chesapeake islanders. It is part of the price of that isolation which has also served to preserve so much that is strange and charming in their lives and customs.

Within Four Walls

Senator Adams of Colorado charges that the President has outmaneuvered Congress in recommending cuts in budgetary items "very dear to the hearts" of Congressmen. If his proposals are rejected Mr. Roosevelt could properly hold Congress responsible for the consequent necessity of raising the debt limit. Hence Mr. Adams suggests that Congress find an easy way of restoring some of the cuts, without levying new taxes, by eliminating certain items in defense appropriations.

Haphazard suggestions of this sort provide the strongest possible argument in favor of the joint budgetary survey which the Senate has approved and which the House is now considering. Instead of clinging to pet spending projects, and cutting the defense program as an offset, Congress ought to scrutinize every spending item impartially and effect economies wherever possible. If the defense program can safely be pruned it should not be done to palliate extravagance in other directions, but to effect that much greater reduction in total governmental costs.

A joint Congressional committee, coordinating the efforts of those primarily responsible for raising revenue and for authorizing expenditures, would be of great assistance in holding appropriations in check. It would also provide individual Congressmen with effective arguments for retrenchment. In an election year it is of course exceptionally difficult to resist pressure to maintain emergency outlays at high levels and to accept imposition of new tax levies. To overcome a natural reluctance to reduce current expenditures the joint committee could drive home the need for economy by focusing attention upon the huge budgetary totals and the long succession of deficits.

The budget message is a challenge to Congress which a responsible legislative body cannot even pretend to ignore. Congress has, indeed, been "put on the spot" by the President, as Mr. Adams indicates. It may be politically uncomfortable if it does economize, but it is equally certain to be politically discredited if it refuses to face up to the economy issue.

As Senator Vandenberg says, the Harrison resolution represents "the first effort that has been made to bring the question of revenue and appropriations within the four walls of the same room." Once that has been done, and a comprehensive picture of the budgetary situation obtained, it will be hard to find a plausible excuse for failure to grapple courageously and discriminatingly with a fiscal crisis that grows more serious with each passing day.

The Mine Disaster

The poignancy of the West Virginia mine disaster is intensified by the fact that it comes just after the close of a year in which the fatality rate in coal mining, on the basis of tonnage produced, was the lowest in the history of the United States.

While this is of small comfort to the relatives and friends of those entombed by the McDowell County tragedy, it is none the less important to realize the tremendous inroads on the hazards of mining which have been made in recent years. In the five years 1906 to 1910, inclusive, there were no less than 84 major explosions and a toll of 2,386 accidental deaths in the coal mines of this country. In the half-decade 1933-1937 the number of these disasters was cut to 24 while the number of deaths was reduced to 202.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, for which complete statistics are now available, there was not a single major explosion in any American coal mine, this being the first 12-month period in which so excellent a record has ever been written. Last July a Kentucky disaster took the lives of 28 miners, but even so the record for the calendar year of 1939 was far above the average.

The remarkable improvement brought about by constant attention to safety factors does not, of course, in any way mitigate the present tragedy. On the contrary, its horror is emphasized by contrast with the trend towards a greater degree of security. Mining disasters need no longer be regarded as inevitable. And the effort to fix responsibility in the present instance should be the stronger because it so sadly mars what had been a steadily improving picture.

Among mining engineers the area in which the stricken mine is situated has long had a bad reputation. Explosive gases are given off continuously in this district and companies operating there have, from necessity, if for no other reason, adopted exceptional precautions against the sort of accident which presumably has happened. It is understood that no open-type electrical equipment is used in the Bartley No. 1 mine. And West Virginia authorities report that a normal part of operations there is to employ large quantities of rock dust, thus rendering explosive vapors inert.

Despite precautions, however, a disastrous explosion has occurred. While the precise cause may never be known one obvious question arises. Why should production be permitted at all in an area where all mining is known to be particularly hazardous? Why, particularly since overproduction has long been the bane of the soft-coal industry, should there not be positive restrictions on the operation of mines in exceptionally gaseous zones?

Responsibility for answering these questions rests only in part upon the State of West Virginia, since any restrictions on the operation of gaseous mines would obviously call for the establishment of Federal standards. The issue, therefore, could very properly be raised in the present session of Congress, and should be considered while the present tragedy is fresh in mind.

On the other hand, inquiry would probably reveal that the mines which are theoretically most dangerous are often in fact among the safest. The obvious hazards are the ones against which precautions will be taken almost automatically. The risks are often actually greater where nature is less lavish with her warnings and where safeguards are therefore less constantly emphasized. In support of this point is the fact that the ill-fated Bartley mine had been operating with an excellent safety record for 15 years.

While the problem is difficult, the challenge is imperative. What has been done to reduce the risk of mining encourages belief that further success is readily possible. And to achieve that success, by practical and scientific means, is an obligation upon the conscience of the Nation. At best it is a hard and unpleasant task which falls upon the men who burrow underground to find the fuel for industry. The least society can do for them in return is to reduce to an absolute minimum the risks they daily run.

Wasting Time

Those who criticize the Administration for encroaching on individual rights will be instinctively gloomy about a current research undertaking. This project, sponsored by the WPA and the Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Home Economics, will seemingly attempt to determine once and for all the location of the feminine waistline. The announced purpose of this seemingly frivolous occupation is to assist the manufacturers of ladies' garments. It seems they have been at a loss as to where this vital dividing line should be located.

Skepticism is more than justified. Location of the waistline is not a matter of scientific exploration, like the discovery of the North Pole, and no amount of measuring will ever crown the effort with success. For the answer to the location of a lady's waistline does not lie with the lady herself. In this case not even haste makes waist.

The powers behind the throne, or in this case the waist, are to be found in Paris, New York and Hollywood. If fashion dictators in all three places should simultaneously decree that the waist is located somewhere near the knees, that is where it would be found. In fact not so many years ago, that is just about where it was found.

Taxation Uniformity

In an address before the New York Board of Trade Mayor LaGuardia has made some very valuable suggestions as to ways in which to reduce the duplication and overlapping of Federal and State taxes.

Complete segregation of sources of revenue—a reform that used frequently to be urged—is no longer practicable. There was a time when the Federal Government, exercising only limited powers, found customs receipts and a few excise taxes ample for its needs. But, as Mr. LaGuardia says, "Them days are gone forever!"

There are still a few levies, such as customs, which belong exclusively to the Federal Government and there are property taxes which are properly reserved for the use of State and municipal governments. But both Federal and State governments have come increasingly to extract revenue from the same sources, from taxes on individual and corporation incomes, from taxes on tobacco, alcohol, and other commodities, from inheritances and gifts.

Mayor LaGuardia proposes, therefore, that these last-named taxes should be collected by the Federal Government, and credits allowed States levying similar taxes, as in case of the inheritance taxes. For example, a State would be allowed a credit or refund for income tax payments levied for State purposes up to a certain percentage of the Federal income tax payment. If a State failed to tax incomes, the Federal Government would retain all the taxes collected from it in that manner. In other words, a State would be penalized for failing to levy an income tax.

Such a system would, of course, save the taxpayer annoyance and reduce administrative costs by centralizing the work of assessment and collection. In Mayor LaGuardia's opinion, it would have the further great advantage of encouraging uniformity of taxation within the States. It would, for instance, put New York, with its relatively high income taxes, on a par with neighboring States that levy no income taxes, and annoyingly advertise that fact to the world.

Undoubtedly lack of tax uniformity creates some very serious problems for more socially conscious States and localities which use the taxing power liberally to make provision for the unemployed, the sick and disabled. As Mayor LaGuardia says, the generous State attracts the underprivileged, and the State that makes inadequate provision for unfortunates attracts business and commerce by promises of lower taxes.

Nevertheless, the proposal to force uniform systems of taxation upon our State governments raises some very grave doubts. Within a limited area such proposals have much to commend them. The suggestion in regard to income taxes, for example, is likely to be seriously considered in the not distant future. But to apply the credit principle to all but a few segregated types of taxation would mean compelling State governments to surrender most of what is left of their sovereign powers. Indeed, it would go far toward destroying the Federal form of government.

Gunner's Delight

From the Chicago Daily News.

The measure of Russian tactical training may be judged by reports that new tanks now arriving on the Russian front are being used as mobile fortifications. For the tank is not a defensive weapon, although its armored sides provide a temptation for that use. Occasionally it may be justified. We are told that a group of tanks were drawn up in a circle, after the manner of the covered wagon barricades used against Indians—but the principal purpose of those Indian war barricades was to preserve the livestock. In the case mentioned, the Russians were successful in driving off a Finnish attack. But had Reilly's battery of our Philippine warfare been present the story would have been different.

For there is nothing an artilleryman likes better as a target than a nice, large tank, standing still. Even the smallest guns are quite effective, and to use anything larger than a three-inch field gun would not be sporting, and a waste of ammunition.

Perhaps this explains the frequent Finnish communiques. "We destroyed one tank;" "Three tanks were demolished;" "The Russians lost six tanks," and so on.

Third Term

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am writing this in my blindness of sight; but, I hope, not in mental darkness. Rather, perhaps, it is the other way—that, not seeing, I truly perceive. It is this question of a third term for President Roosevelt.

We hear it, more and more, as the time of Presidential nominations draws nearer. We are told that he ought to be reelected because of the chaotic state of world affairs; of the country's own uncertain conditions, perils, and threatened disasters within and without.

That was what many people thought about a third term for President Washington. That he, by his calm sagacity, proven administrative skill, known patriotism, and integrity, was the only man able to guide the affairs of the new Republic in the chaotic internal condition in which the internal industrial and political life of the "great experiment" found itself, and with a European upheaval—not very unsimilar to that prevailing abroad today.

The Nation almost universally believed that George Washington was "the only man" who could keep the country safe both within and without. But he did not think so. He would not be influenced by misguided flattery and adulation to turn from his firm convictions of what was essential to the welfare, security and the permanance of the republican form of government.

Was his belief correct? Did the Republic fall to pieces? Or did it raise up an Adams, a Jefferson, a Madison, a Monroe, a Jackson, a Lincoln, a Woodrow Wilson? One more question I would ask. Has the manhood of this mighty Nation so shrunken in moral stature that, out of its many millions, there is not even a handful to make potent successors to a potent leader?

"History repeats itself." In the matter of a Presidential third term, let us hope, let us believe, let us make sure that our Republic's history shall repeat itself.

Intelligent Leadership

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many thanks for the very inspiring account of the life of W. Averill Harriman of Arden, N. Y., in The Post of January 7. There would be far less confusion in the country today if it had more men as humane in business as Mr. Harriman. I concur heartily in his beliefs that business should furnish its share of brains and leadership, should cooperate with Government, try to solve great problems such as unemployment, competition and monopoly, and most of all take its message to the public, not as propaganda, but as intelligent leadership in trying to bring greater fruits of industrial development to everyone.

It seems to a student of history that the troubles throughout the world today and in times past are also due to an unwillingness on the part of world business, labor, and governments, to view with candor the problems that confront them. If these purely economic questions are to be solved, then business, labor and governments must unite and agree upon a plan that will ban for all time the diplomatic evils which bring about secret treaties for balances of powers that force hardships upon lesser power groups and encourage them to seek revenge in the future.

"Imperative" Change

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Politics peculiar to the New Deal failed to entice the "Republican fly" into the New Deal party's parlor at the Jackson Day Dinner in Washington, much to the amusement of an observing public. Evidently the disappointment over the absence of Republicans at the dinner was such as to cause the Roosevelt speech to prove of the customary sort, displaying but too plainly the fear of defeat for the party in the next National election.

The Democratic Party that was, but is now swallowed up in the New Deal, always professed to be the poor man's party. To some extent that was true. But how things have changed!

The list of appointments to ambassadorial and other places, as given in an editorial in The Post of January 9, shows but too plainly the power that wealth has attained in the New Deal Party—for instance, the appointment of a former head of the Morgan steel trust to visit the Vatican on a mission.

Republican leadership now has the opportunity of bringing to the attention of the voters the type of politics that has been given the people by the New Deal. If our country is ever to be restored to normal conditions and escape a worse state of affairs, then it is beyond question that a complete change in National Administration procedure is imperative. Only a return to American ideals and practices will ensure future peace and prosperity to the American people.

The Time For A Trump

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The threat of a large-scale German offensive against the Allied powers in the spring is imminent, according to well-informed authorities.

Since the beginning of war, expert opinion has been making all sorts of predictions concerning wartime offensive measures. Most of them have been wrong. Therefore I choose the opposite extreme and predict Germany will not attack Britain and France as forecast three months from now, but will continue to appear to be preparing for a gigantic thrust at her enemies just to keep her record of deception clean.

In the meantime the Allies, in keen anticipation of what is to come, will sharpen their teeth and tighten their strangle hold on the Reich's import and export trade.

My guess is that Germany will not attack the Allied powers in a big way until such time as she has determined that all other methods of warfare have failed in their objective to undermine the enemy war machine.

When Germany makes her big thrust, the world will know her last desperate trump card is being played on a gamble to win all, or lose all. FRANK J. SALAMON.

D. C. Housing

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I consider myself fortunate in being in no need of farm aid, relief, a pension or a job. But I'll tell the world I could use a nice little apartment for which I shouldn't have to pay one-third of my income.

This National Capital of ours is just starved for decent housing for those of small incomes. With living costs in Washington the highest in the country, we need governmental sponsorship and financial aid for the building of apartments for that army of us who earn under $2,000 a year.

Shall we have to wait until we have achieved the local election—and local responsibility—of our city government? I think the citizens associations and the Tenants League ought to push such a housing program in this session of Congress.

On The Chin

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The omniscient editor of your valuable paper expounded weightily in The Post of January 4 on the softness of our age. From the luxury of his easy chair he criticized seamen for demanding a few of the requirements of civilized life while doing their job.

Any seamen, of course, could have told him that the extent of recent comforts initiated on board ships is limited to slightly better meals, a mattress instead of straw to sleep on, and a bunk room which is free from slops and smells. Supposing the Chesapeake Bay ice-breakers to include at least some of these decencies, there is no doubt that plenty of seamen could have been found to man the ships.

The editor forgets, however, that the politician, whether hiring seamen or street cleaners, is more interested in getting votes for the next election than competence. With this conviction in mind, I called my old friend Pat Whalen of the National Maritime Union in Baltimore to see whether competent seamen were really scarce in Baltimore.

As I suspected, the politicians had not taken the trouble to call the only place where any self-respecting, competent, able-bodied seamen would be likely to be, i. e., the Union Hall, the place where by long years of experience the seamen have learned to get at least a partially adequate return in better wages and conditions for their hard and dangerous work. But who would expect the average politician to know a simple thing like that—or a newspaper editor either?

The Thirst For Power

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am convinced, after many years of observation, that man cannot be trusted with unlimited power. He is not infinite; therefore, it is too great a risk for the best interest of the whole people. If he is given time he never holds fast to the righteous course, that insatiate spirit grows bit by bit, and should it gain a foothold to a key job by his artistic hypocrisy he will discard this mask as he journeys.

In other words, man is likened to the depth of soil the sower, when he went out to sow, encountered; some seed fell on stony ground, some fell among thorns which grew up and choked it. It was not the fault of the seed in his knapsack, it was the kind of soil the seed was wasted upon.

Successful Ball

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In behalf of the entire student body in general and in behalf of our committee on arrangements in particular, I wish publicly to express our appreciation for the very splendid cooperation you gave us in making our annual Crimson and Gold Ball a huge success.

So often, I suppose, people are apt to forget the aid of a newspaper in launching various projects. We do not want to be one of them for we are keenly conscious of the fact that without the aid of The Washington Post our efforts would have been greatly thwarted.

The Basha's Orange Trees

"Truly, the pious are in gardens and springs, taking what their Lord brings them," quoted Sidi Taib, as he sat beside the fountain in our garden and ate some of the oranges that the lone orange tree bore with great relutance.

"God willing, what I shall enjoy most in Paradise will be the spacious gardens and the musical fountains, playing all day to delight the ears of true believers. I do not set much store on the large-eyed maidens, for unless God is merciful beyond all our deserts, the maidens will have tongues as well as eyes."

"But, speaking of gardens," he resumed, and here I detected his zeal for arranging my life asserting itself, "this garden of yours is, if I may say so, a very poorly-kept affair."

I admitted the truth of his comments but protested that, in spite of my good intentions, I never could find the time to work in it.

"What you need is a good gardener to come occasionally and work in it for you, for naturally you do not know much about our Moorish flowers. I know just the man for you. He works part of the time for the Basha, and he will make an especially fitting gardener for you, for his name is Habeeb en-Najjar, after the holy man of Antioch who was the first one of that city to believe the teachings of your Prophet Sidni Aissa."

The next morning Sidi Taib brought Habeeb en-Najjar to our house and introduced him as a man skilled beyond all others in the growing of flowers.

Sidi Taib and Habeeb surveyed the sorry spectacle of our garden and entered at once into a vigorous discussion with many gestures and much tracing of lines in the earth. Sidi Taib, I gathered, was for a formal arrangement, with geometrical beds and orderly paths, whereas Habeeb held out for a less artificial plan, whereby the plants were grouped according to size, with the taller ones at the bottom of the garden and the low-growing ones near the house, and through it all an informal trail leading eventually to the cookhouse. This consumed the greater part of the morning with no apparent decision being reached, and Habeeb took his leave, promising to return the next day.

As long as I stayed in the garden to chat with him while he scratched the ground in a desultory fashion, he might be said to work, but if I made for the house he followed me, still intent upon our discussion of the wonders of America, of which he never tired of hearing, or of the beauties of our garden, which were soon to be made manifest under his skilled hands.

Since he was the most engaging conversationalist I had yet met in Fez, a city where conversation is the main occupation, I did not begrudge Habeeb the eight francs I paid him for each visit. He never failed to bring an armload of flowers, more by far than our puny garden could produce in a year, and occasionally at sunset he brought a basket of plants, which he set out at random in the garden.

When I asked him where the flowers and plants came from, he told me that he worked in the Basha's gardens and that this great man had more flowers than he knew what to do with.

However, when Habeeb and one of his fellow gardeners installed a dozen fine young orange trees in our garden one day, explaining that the Basha had gone to visit some friends in Meknes for a few weeks and would have forgotten that he had any orange trees by the time he got back, I began to wonder just how little notice the Basha took of his gardens.

Evidently the Basha returned in a much shorter time that Habeeb had anticipated and in a more observant frame of mind, for shortly after this acquisition to my garden a troop of the Basha's policemen presented themselves at my door. The sergeant of the guard thrust me rudely aside and led his men into the garden, where the 12 orange trees stuck out like so many sore thumbs.

I was filled with terror and with visions of myself dying a lonely death in some dank Moorish dungeon, and sent Teddy off in all haste to summon Sidi Taib or, failing him, the English Consul.

In the meantime the sergeant informed me that my accomplice, Habeeb en-Najjar, was in prison and that I was to be taken at once to the Basha, to pay a thousand francs for each of the orange trees and a thousand francs on general principles. The policemen settled themselves in various strategic and comfortable positions and let it be known that they would like some tea.

At last Sidi Taib arrived, and I implored him to save me from prison, disgrace, and ruin. He entered into a discussion with the sergeant of the guard, punctuated by loud cries, violent gestures, and other indications of a bargaining in progress.

"If you will give him 100 francs and each of his men ten francs, he will explain to the Basha that you acted through ignorance, and that will be the end of it," Sidi Taib told me.

"But what about poor Habeeb? They have him in jail."

After another bit of bargaining, Sidi Taib said that I could secure the gardener's release for another 100 francs. "But," he cautioned me, "do not pay them an hassani till they bring Habeeb here."

The policemen went away and presently came back, bringing the unfortunate Habeeb, whose smile had for once deserted him. The policemen received their rewards, Majouba brought on more tea, and we all settled down for a happy chat.

"You have saved my life!" Habeeb declared, "and I am your slave forever."

"One thing is certain," observed Sidi Taib; "you can't go back to work for the Basha."

"That is my good fortune," said Habeeb. "Now I can work for Sidi Yahia every day, and we can put in that round bed of red geraniums that you were talking about. After all, the Basha paid me only five francs a day, whereas Sidi Yahia pays me eight."

Dies' Foes Confounded

THE REPORT of the Dies Committee has received much approval, rising in some cases to the pitch of cheers, but some of the standard New Deal package goods dispatches out of Washington have taken a peculiar attitude in their embarrassment. Dies and his committee were expected to turn out in their report a masterpiece of clumsy absurdity, but he crossed up the propagandists of the Administration by delivering something that was distinctly major league.

Dies was heckled in his own hearings and harassed constantly in print by a campaign of ridicule, for most of which, it may readily be admitted, he furnished plenty of raw material. But when he unexpectedly delivered a good report he was attacked with fresh vigor, obviously inspired by chagrin, on the ground that he had not prepared the report himself alone. It was also reported—and with such similarity of detail as to suggest a propaganda pipe line—that the more liberal members of the committee made a chump of Mr. Dies one day by proposing that now was the time to name the communists in the New Deal and that Dies, thus confronted, could not make good.

New Deal Claque Likes Ghost Writers

IT IS IMMATERIAL whether Dies himself prepared the report or employed a ghost, and the New Deal propaganda corps should be the last to criticize any man on such grounds in view of the admitted fact that President Roosevelt himself often obtains several drafts of a speech or state paper from members of his political household and selects one or a combination of several as the version for which he will take the credit or the blame. This is a practice which has been defended by the New Deal claque with such enthusiasm and skill that it has received public approval. Therefore, Dies was only following distinguished precedent, and the merits of the report cannot be used against him.

As to his inability to name any communists in the New Deal, there is more to be said than merely that he wouldn't or couldn't name names when and if he was challenged or put on the spot. He could no doubt have named many individuals who have all the characteristics of communists and who, up to the invasion of Poland and Finland by the Russian Army, had nothing but praise and excuses for the Stalin government and little else but abuse and contempt for the American system. He could have pointed out that when Harold Ickes found occasion to deliver speeches he turned up as the guest of the Lawyers' Guild and the Newspaper Guild, both of which organizations have been strongly influenced and imposed upon by communist agents.

Tolerance Shown Until Nazi Pact

DIES MIGHT have developed the fact that, although this administration has been opposed to Hitlerism from the very beginning, there had always been, until the Russian alliance with Germany, a generous tolerance for communism and communists. Communism, although indistinguishable from Hitlerism, was a meritorious experiment, but Hitlerism was a vile thing. No Nazi, imported or domestic, was welcome in the Administration, either socially or politically, but individuals who lacked only Communist Party cards to confirm their identity were welcome.

It will be recalled that when Dies was investigating Nazi activities he was congratulated by the same press that was to slash at him a little later for using the same methods on the communist conspiracy. And it may be pointed out that on a previous occasion the same propaganda vigorously defended a 100 per cent New Dealer whose methods of investigation had been even more dangerous to civil liberties than most of the Dies committee. That one would be Senator Black of Alabama. But Senator Black was not run out of public life or even reproved for his ethics and methods. On the contrary, amid cheers from the New Deal claque, this late backslid member of a night-riding and lynching organization was appointed to the United States Supreme Court. As one who would "liberalize" the Court.

Dies was guilty of much awkward foolishness, but to those who condoned Black's methods of investigation and the deliberate degradation of the Supreme Court intended and achieved by his appointment he owes not even the courtesy of a contemptuous reply. Look at their hands.

Foreign Missions To Rally Behind Cause of Peace

By the Associated Press

Plans to rally Protestant foreign mission organizations to the cause of peace were outlined to President Roosevelt yesterday by Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Bishop Tucker said he told the President that a "Christian foreign service convocation will be sponsored by the foreign missions conference of North America," which represents 10,000 missionaries.

No time or place has been selected for a meeting, the bishop said, but it will be held in this country.

Ruminations On Dies Committee

THE PROBLEM posed by the existence of the Dies Committee, and its possible continuance, is one which lies at the very heart of democratic government. It is the question of how free institutions and self-governing societies can defend themselves against those organized groups who wish to destroy existing society by the weapons which that society puts into their hands, and whose right to use them it constitutionally and traditionally guarantees.

The first law of any society is self-preservation. Organized society is an immensely complex and delicate organization and organism, and upon its adequately smooth functioning depend, to an ever-increasing extent, the actual physical lives of the millions of human beings who compose it.

It is not a machine that, once set up, functions mechanically until it wears out. Organized society is kept going with tolerable satisfaction to its members, as long as most basic physical wants are satisfied with no too-prodigious demands upon the individual; as long as there is confidence and hope, and as long as there is a sufficient margin for what Jefferson called "the pursuit of happiness," in which, I suppose, should be included the satisfaction of certain human desires almost or perhaps quite as basic as the economic; those arising out of the struggle of the ego for satisfaction, and those arising out of the sexual demand for expression and satisfaction.

Society Depends On Inhibitions

MAN IS an animal, and not a machine, and in his natural state—for instance, in an untrained childhood—pursues his primary wants in an uninhibited way.

Society, on the contrary, like all education, is to a great extent dependent on the cultivation of inhibitions.

Men learn and are taught to curb their instincts, either by fear of the law, or, more subtly, by the pressure of custom and tradition, or by the hope of reward, or by the inculcation of moral and religious principles, also sometimes combined with the fear of hell and damnation, and by the constant appeal to reason—to that lofty and unique power that this particular animal has, to develop himself and the natural world around him, by thought.

All societies, at all times, however, live on a volcano. The volcano is not outside, but inside.

Edna St. Vincent Millay was correct, in her great cycle of sonnets, "Epitaph for the Race of Man," when she attributed the final demise of homo sapiens, not to fire, flood, earthquake, or disease, but to the self-destructive forces in man himself, and, through him, in society, which is his creation.

For, although organized society is man's only escape from the jungle, from barbarism into culture, from anarchy into civilization, and though civilization offers him his only hope of freedom—freedom from the most primitive enemies — civilization is purchased at a price, the suppression or curbing of many basic animal instincts, and it is, therefore, continually menaced. If men begin to think that it provides inadequate satisfactions, they will blow it up.

That is happening all over the world, at this moment, in a manner sufficiently volcanic to create an entirely justified alarm.

British Oppose Too Vigorous Police

NOW, this business of preserving society cannot simply be reduced to increasing the police controls.

The British, who have the largest experience of keeping their own society afloat in stormy seas and are doubtless the most politically gifted of peoples, have always preferred a certain amount of crime to too many and too vigorous policemen.

They have depended on more subtle social pressures, and have been opposed to rigidities.

Our own political system is founded on the concept of checks and balances, and has always preferred elasticity to a more obvious and immediate efficiency.

And unless society can constantly make new adjustments to new situations it will crack. There is no such thing as a static society. The only alternative to revolution, which is sudden, violent and catastrophic change, is reform, which is continual change.

Therefore, the radical has a very important social function. Through him symptoms of social illness become articulate. The articulate malcontent is as essential to a healthy social organism as a man's left arm is to his body.

One of the great functions of free speech, free press and free assembly is the airing of grievances, which it is then the function of those who govern, whether in the political or economic fields, to weigh and to correct.

Means Of Correcting Evils Are Disputed

IT IS ALSO a function of free discussion to consider the means of correcting evils, and it is here, often, that the bitterest divergences arise, and the choice of method is more often determined by trial and error than by reason and logic.

On the other hand, the exercise of all social rights is hedged about by certain standards—for without standards there can be no civilization.

In our own society, as Prof. Max Ascoli very brilliantly pointed out in the current number of The American Scholar, all freedoms are subjected to certain standards. As a worker I am not permitted by my trade union to depress my colleagues' wages; as an employer I am no longer permitted unlimited exploitation of the need of my employes; I may own property, but the ownership entails considerable obligations. I am encouraged to marry, but not to commit bigamy. The one freedom that remains almost absolute is freedom of speech extending to freedom of assembly and organization, and here almost no standards are imposed by law.

I may not shout "Fire!" in a crowded theater, and I may not libel any person in a way probably damaging to his economic interests, but I may publicly slander and insult my fellow citizen as individuals and groups. I may lie in the most barefaced manner, I may use every trick of demagogical agitation to set one part of society against another. The spoken and printed word has a continual open season.

People Talked Out Of Their Liberties

NOW, ALL THIS would be all right, perhaps, were it not for the demonstrable fact that the liberties of people have not been dynamited out of their hands, in the twentieth century; they have been talked away from them.

Free speech and a free press, institutions for preserving and extending human freedom, have become the most powerful instruments for the re-establishment of slavery.

And, curiously, liberals bent upon the preservation of free speech, are the first to rush to the defense of its would-be destroyers.

But there is only one possible way to preserve free speech, and that is to fight continually for the honor of free speech, and for standards of free speech. Otherwise, it becomes an instrument of barbarism, not of civilization; of subjection, not of liberation.

It is not the business of lovers of free speech to fight for liars, knaves and spies! Lovers of free speech must first of all be lovers of speech itself; they must honor speech and demand that it be honorable.

A very great Austrian journalist and grammarian, the late Karl Krauss, predicted the decline of the Austro-Hungarian state from the degradation of the written word in the Austrian press.

He spent years of his life showing how, from day to day, the standards of language were being degraded, until the word was becoming an instrument of intellectual anarchy.

The parable of the Tower of Babel is profound. Even among people who use the same dictionary, it is possible to disrupt the whole of society if words are raped of a meaning common to that society. The rape is going on today!

To what extent the degradation is accomplished already can be seen by reading the revolutionary writings of Thomas Jefferson or the great reform utterances of Abraham Lincoln, and comparing them with the verbiage of the Daily Worker or of Social Justice!

Since we rightly fear to assault free speech, our constant demand for standards must be accelerated. And certainly we have a right to know all there is to know about the speakers. If they are agents of the Communist International handing out dope cooked up for them to the last "i and t" by the party line, let us know it! If they are talking "American democracy" when they mean the Soviet system, let us know it! If they are pretending to be American citizens when they are not, let us know it!

Dies Committee Might Become Gestapo

SO, INSOFAR as the Dies Committee has given the American public a picture of the methods of some very unscrupulous enemies of organized society, it has performed a function.

But let us, while watching the Dozenbergs, Kuhns, Browders and the others, also keep an eye on the Dies Committee.

For the Dies Committee might easily develop into a political police, into our own little Gestapo.

The word "Red" is just an appellation in lieu of a definition. Honest radicals have a necessary function. There is plenty that is rotten in Denmark, and if everybody who gets indignant about it is gagged, how are the complacent to be awakened?

Radicalism, honest and intelligent, and radicalism, corrupt and mendacious, both thrive only when there are real grievances that can be aired, or exaggerated, or exploited.

The report of the Dies Committee is praiseworthy for noting this. And the business of the public is to see that they do not forget it.

Not Enough So On Home Front

A FEW OBJECTIONS are beginning to be raised to the lending of money to Finland. All that I have seen or heard are on the ground that our "neutrality" might be compromized, none on the ground that we can't afford it. Yet if we lend the money we will have to borrow it. It will increase the national debt or the debt of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Despite the amazing fighting abilities of the Finns, and their scrupulousness in financial matter, we may never get it back.

Senator Glass ("even Senator Glass" I am tempted to write) announces that he is in favor of letting the Finns have $60,000,000, even though we do have to borrow it. The Senator explains that he is not "neutral" in his attitude toward the present plight of the Finns.

The explanation is splendidly forthright. If it is adequate to justify letting the Finns have money, it must be adequate to justify other expenditures by the Federal Government.

Neutral To Plight Of Jobless Youth?

HERE ARE A FEW other expenditures which might well be subjected to the neutrality test:

Are you neutral toward the plight of 3,500,000 or 4,000,000 young men and women under the age of 25 who are both out of school and out of work? The President's budget for next year cuts the Civilian Conservation Corps by $64,000,000, a little more than the amount it is now proposed to let the Finns have. That sum is three-fifths of the entire appropriation for the National Youth Administration for this year, and three-fourths of the entire NYA appropriation for next year as budgeted by the President.

Are you neutral toward the health of the American people? The $60,000,000 asked for the Finns is almost exactly twice the amount asked for the United States Public Health Service for next year. It is as much as it would cost to launch the entire national health program embodied in the Wagner bill.

Are you neutral toward the needy unemployed? Here $60,000,000 does not go so far, but it would employ about 85,000 workers on WPA for one year.

Are you neutral when you look at our national defense? Here again $60,000,000 is not a big item —only about two-thirds the cost of an ordinary battleship.

Glass In Power When Debt Hit Peak

THESE QUESTIONS, and 100 more like them which could be asked, are not addressed particularly to Senator Glass. His voting record shows that he has been more benevolent in his attitude toward some of these needs on the home front than several of his Senatorial conferees have been. But I can't dismiss Senator Glass from my mind because his reason—"I am not neutral"—carries me back to the time when that was the sole reason for expanding the national debt, and anybody who suggested that any argument could stand against it would have been branded as a traitor, and perhaps stowed away in Leavenworth. That time, of course, was after we entered the World War. It was during the latter part of that period of unprecedented and still unequalled spending of borrowed money that Senator Glass himself became Secretary of the Treasury. He held that office from December, 1918, until February, 1920.

In a little more than two years of the World War and its immediate aftermath, we increased the gross debt of the Federal Government from $1,225,000,000 to $26,597,000,000. The high point was reached on August 31, 1919, under Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass.

In 29 months we added $25,372,000,000 to the gross national debt (about twice the largest amount spent in any one year by the Roosevelt Administration) and added more than $13,000,000 to the national debt (about three times the largest Roosevelt addition for one year.)

This Nation's Gravest Economic Crisis

WHEN MR. ROOSEVELT entered the White House on March 4, 1933, the gross Federal debt stood at $20,937,000,000. If his budget plan for next year is adopted, the gross Federal debt on June 30, 1941, will be just under $45,000,000,000. This would be an increase of about $24,000,000,000 during eight years and almost four months. In all that time, during the gravest economic crisis that has ever beset this Nation and, possibly excepting the World War, the gravest crisis that has beset the world since Napoleon, our national debt will have been increased less than it was during 29 months of 1917-19.

If we were attacked, or jumped into a war tomorrow, we would stop worrying about the national debt. We would tax heavily—much more heavily, I hope, than during the World War. But we would borrow from ourselves, too. We would do whatever we deemed necessary to achieve our objective.

We could stand heavier taxation now. But there is no need to worry about borrowing if it will help us to reach our objective. Our main trouble right now seems to be that too many people are neutral when they look at the home front.

Dr. Bowman Named To China Commission

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt has appointed Dr. Isaiah Bowman, president of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, as the American commissioner on the international commission set up under the treaty for the advancement of peace between the United States and China, signed September 15, 1914. Dr. Bowman's appointment fills the vacancy created by the death of Dr. Frank J. Goodnow.

Japan In A Vise

By Barnet Nover

When The 1911 Treaty Expires

FOR FIVE and a half months well-informed Japanese have viewed the approach of January 26, 1940, with steadily increasing alarm.

On that date the Japanese-American commercial treaty of 1911 expires. This pact places a legal barrier in the way of any punitive action by the United States against Japanese goods. But once it expires the bars will be down.

After January 26, therefore, an American sword of Damocles will hang over the island empire. A clause in the Smoot-Hawley tariff, for instance, gives the President authority to embargo all imports from Japan, after making a finding that Japan was discriminating against American trade. Other less drastic measures can also be taken, such as the imposition of added duties on Japanese goods entering the American market.

TO BE SURE, the Government may decide not immediately to retaliate commercially against Japan for the large number of discriminatory measures put through by Japanese authorities against American businessmen in the occupied areas of China. The Japanese hope and pray this will prove to be the case. But as long as no agreement is negotiated replacing the one about to expire they cannot be certain.

Japan happens to be anything but popular in the United States. Americans have disliked the cavalier way the Japanese military authorities have played ducks and drakes with American interests in China. They have found nothing to commend in Japan's undeclared war and much less in the barbarous way Japan has conducted that war. A very powerful current of opinion exists in the United States, manifested recently in a Gallup poll on the subject and more recently in the plea made by former Secretary Stimson in a letter to the New York Times, that this country place an embargo on essential war materials to Japan. And no fewer than four bills are on the calendar of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee urging some such action.

FOR VARIOUS reasons, Congress may decide not to vote such an embargo. That will not, however, prevent the Administration from exercising rights it possesses to take retaliatory action against Japanese trade. And under existing circumstances such action may deal a crippling blow to the island empire.

For two and a half years Japan has fought on, with victory still beyond her grasp. The war has strained her economy, depleted her reserves, all but wiped out her gold holdings. To secure the raw materials she needs to continue the conflict she must secure foreign exchange. But with Europe at war, Japan's trade has been curtailed. The American market has long been important to the island empire. It is all-important now.

UNTIL July 26, 1939, Japan felt that she could safely ignore repeated American protests against violations of American rights. In the belief of Tokyo, the American bark was much worse than the bite. The denunciation by the United States of the 1911 commercial treaty was, however, an eye-opener. It was an indication that this country meant business.

For a time the Japanese comforted themselves with the belief that what the United States was after was simply another commercial treaty and it was announced in Tokyo that Japan was prepared to meet American wishes in this regard. Later, when this belief died aborning, the Tokyo government looked about for concessions it might make to mollify the United States. But with the army still very much in the saddle the best it could do was a promise to reopen the Yangtze and the Pearl rivers to foreign — including American—navigation.

SINCE THEN the Japanese have moved heaven and earth to avert the threatened blow. Through persistent propaganda and often with the use of misleading statistics they have sought to persuade Americans how important it is to both countries to continue Japanese-American trade unimpaired. They have floated rumors that if the United States will not play ball with Japan, Japan will make a deal with Russia. And all the time the clamor for a new trade treaty has steadily increased.

How much substance can be given to the latter threat, which has undoubtedly impressed some Americans, can be seen in the fact that concurrent with the reports that Japan was considering the creation of a Tokyo-Moscow axis, there are also reports that one of the conditions which Japan insists on prior to setting up Wang Ching-wei as head of a new central government is that he conclude an anti-Comintern agreement with Tokyo.

Because Russia happens to be busy elsewhere at the moment, Moscow has shown a readiness to even out minor differences with Japan. Thus a new fisheries agreement (limited to one year, however), has been concluded and also an agreement for the delimitation of frontiers. But the very fact that Russia is busy with her war with Finland makes it most unlikely that she will make a deal with Japan of a kind that would insure the latter victory in China and thus possibly pave the way for an attack on Siberia.

JAPAN TODAY is in a vise. She cannot make peace on terms which will satisfy China and satisfy as well the other signatories of the Nine-Power Treaty, including the United States.

The army leaders who rule the roost are not even willing to make minor concessions to the Western powers. They fought like steers against the reopening of the Yangtze, even though that was bound up with so many conditions as to make it valueless. But so powerful are they in the Japanese scheme of things that it is not they but the poor civilian stooges who from time to time take over the reins of government at Tokyo whom the Japanese people are forced to blame for the parlous plight of the island empire. And that plight will be more precarious than ever after January 26.

Mississippi Senators Speak After 3 Years

By the Associated Press

Senators Harrison and Bilbo, of Mississippi, are on speaking terms again after three years in which each has given the other the silent treatment.

They met in a Senate Office Building elevator yesterday afternoon and engaged in a pleasant "social conversation," both of them later related.

There was no "political significance" in their resumption of speaking relations, they insisted, and apparently no change in Harrison's intention to support any opposition which may develop to Bilbo's re-election campaign this year.

When Harrison stepped into the elevator no one was in it but Bilbo and the operator.

"How do you do, Senator Bilbo, how's your health?" Harrison asked.

"Fine," Bilbo replied.

The operator said nothing, but later reported he "nearly collapsed."

The Once Over

'Quint House'

THE DIONNE quints are to get back the custody of their parents.

The plan to provide a home in which the kids can live with their own folks is making progress. Everybody feels that it is time the children experienced the heavy responsibility of having parents around the house.

Plans for Quint House are said to be in the works already. There will be 14 in the family exclusive of help. This hands the architects the initial problem of deciding whether to design a home or a clubhouse.

It will present many novel problems. Any home with five kids the same age in it needs the best brains the architectural profession can provide. Requirement Number One is a room where Pop and Mom can get some rest.

THEN THERE will have to be a reception room for corporations seeking indorsements, picture rights, etc., a conference room for the board of directors and a series of projection rooms.

And, of course, a rumpus room for use when Dr. Dafoe and Papa Dionne have anything to discuss.

For nearly six years pop has been able to see the children only by appointment. Dr. Dafoe has been head man with the Ontario government next, Mommer Dionne next and papa a bad last. You can understand popper's resentment. You know how proud and important a man feels when he is the father of one child; imagine his feeling when he is told he is the daddy of five, but doesn't count!

The quintuplets are an industry rather than a family. In fact they are one of the few business institutions to be able to make big money for the last five years.

IT GOT SO the obvious reply to "How are the children doing?" was "Very well. They are 30 per cent ahead of last year for the third quarter."

With the children occupying such a position in the financial world it was best to surround them with guardianships, boards, commissions, and interlocking directorates during their more tender years. Business responsibilities are not good for a growing child.

Peace Policies Seen Reviving U.S.-Italian Ties

Lifting of Penalty Duties on Silk Likely To Speed Process

By Andrue Berding.
Associated Press Staff Writer

A rapprochement between two mighty neutrals—the United States and Italy—is the most portentous development in recent American foreign policy.

The increased friendliness between the two countries probably will be evidenced shortly by the lifting of countervailing duties against imports of Italian silk. These duties, which are levies in addition to the regular tariff, were imposed last year after this Government alleged that Italy was subsidizing silk exports.

Since that time the Italian government has furnished information that it has discontinued the practices regarded here as constituting a subsidy.

Another evidence of the closer relations was a cordial talk which President Roosevelt had last week with Prince Colonna, the Italian Ambassador, in which they surveyed relations between the two countries.

Attitude Reversed

All this is a far cry from the period last year when criticism by one country of the other was the habit and American naval officials, testifying before Congress, linked Italy with Germany and Japan as a potential enemy of the United States.

The change springs in part from the fact that the two nations find themselves faced with many identical problems of neutrality. Moreover, both have the same prime political interest in preventing the spread of the war.

Their simultaneous opposition to Soviet Russia's advance into Finland is another point linking the policies of the two governments. The United States sent money to Finland. Italy sent airplanes. Both indulged in some outspoken talk about Russia.

Italy suspended her transatlantic steamship service when the war broke out, but resumed it to the United States. The Maritime Commission recently authorized the largest American liners, Manhattan and Washington, to operate on a new line from New York to Italy.

Outstanding between Italy and the United States are two embryonic economic accords—a trade agreement and a commercial treaty. The trade agreement was initiated before the Ethiopian war and negotiations ceased because of the conflict. There is no possibility of its being reopened at this time, when a fight over the trade agreements program is beginning in Congress.

The commercial treaty was reached in substance but could not be signed because Italy wanted it concluded in the name of the King of Italy and Emperor of Ethiopia, and the United States objected on the grounds this would imply recognition of Italy's Ethiopian conquest. The United States is willing, however, to conclude it if an arrangement can be found to get around this point.

Precedent Exists

Some such arrangement was followed when William Phillips was sent to Rome as Ambassador and Fulvio Suvich came here as Italian Ambassador. Suvich presented his credentials to the President as the envoy of Vittorio Emanuele, King of Italy and Emperor of Ethiopia; Mr. Roosevelt accepted him as the envoy of Vittorio Emanuele, King of Italy, and everyone was happy. In the case of Phillips the rigamarole was reversed.

The procedure adopted when Suvich came here was repeated when Prince Colonna presented his credentials last year.

The renewed surge of friendliness between the two governments may be a portent of an eventual "peace front" line-up. President Roosevelt is sending a personal representative to the Vatican, Myron C. Taylor. The Vatican undoubtedly will keep closely in touch with Mussolini's government in any preparations for peace.

A common effort by the United States, Italy and the Vatican may have some chance of success—when the opportune moment arrives.

Jobs on Increase For CCC Enrollees

Approximately 8,500 CCC camp enrollees were discharged to accept employment during the period of September 15 to November 1. The number placed in jobs, after camp guidance and training, represents an increase of about one-third over previous periods, it was announced yesterday by John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education.

The commissioner gave much credit for the increased back-to-work movement to the CCC camp educational committees, consisting of the company commander project superintendent and educational adviser, with other CCC officials who have been conducting an intensive training and job-finding drive.

U. S. May Aid Sweden, Says Jesse Jones

Reveals Discussion Of Credits to 3d Scandinavian Nation

By the Associated Press

Jesse Jones, chief of the Federal lending agencies, suggested yesterday the possibility that Sweden might be added to two other northern European nations to which the United States has extended credit.

He told a press conference there had been informal discussions of a loan to Sweden, but no amount had been mentioned.

Credits of $10,000,000 each have been made available to Finland and Norway for the purchase of nonmilitary supplies.

There is pending before Congress a bill to lend Finland $60,000,000 to aid that republic in its fight against Russia. The Senate Banking Committee asked the Treasury and Reconstruction Finance Corporation yesterday for their views on the loan as proposed in the bill by Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan.

May Raise Limit

Jones said he knew no reason why the United States "shouldn't make a loan to Sweden." He commented that the United States "certainly would be glad to help all the Scandinavian countries" financially.

The credits to Finland and Norway have been made through the Export-Import Bank. Noting that the law limits the total loans by the agency which may be outstanding at any one time to $100,000,000, Jones said he believed Congress would be asked to raise that limit by $75,000,000 to $100,000,000.

Allies Seek 12,000 U. S. Planes In Preparing for Long War

France and Britain Contracting for Deliveries in Next Two Years in Effort To Surpass Output of German Factories

By Devon Francis.
Associated Press Aviation Editor.

New York, Jan. 11.—In preparation for a long war, Great Britain and France are arranging for the purchase of as many as 12,000 American war planes in the next two years, authoritative sources said tonight.

With steady shipments of American military planes on contracts, the Allies expect to exceed the German production rate by the middle of the coming summer.

For several weeks representatives of the British air ministry have been surveying the potential production capacity of every United States aircraft plant turning out military planes.

More Contracts Promised

To release American aircraft factories manufacturing for export from large scale commitments on anything but combat types—particularly bombers and pursuits—the British will make training planes in Canada under United States licenses, it was reliably reported.

The long-range buying program in the United States was described as still being in a "liquid state," though verbal assurance has been given American manufacturers of large additional contracts. In some instances the Allies have underwritten the cost of aircraft plant expansion to assure themselves a continuing supply of machines.

Finns Seek Bombers

It was emphasized, however, that no contracts as yet have been signed for warplanes other than the approximately 4,000 which were ordered before the war and up to January 1. Of that number, 1,500 were contracted for prior to last September.

Finnish sources in New York said their country had been negotiating this week in London for the purchase of "several squadrons" of American-made bombers.

Prior to the war the British contracted for 230 of the bombers, the last of which now are being delivered. Recently they ordered 200 more.

Indicative of a rapid rise in productivity, the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce today set at $20,000,000 a month the dollar value of American aircraft and engine production on January 1. The chamber estimated this would be boosted to $50,000,000 by July 1.

Md. Board Refuses To Shift Span Site

Baltimore, Jan. 11 (AP).—The State Roads Commission put final approval today on plans for a Sinepuxent Bay bridge at Ocean City despite protests of some residents opposed to building the span at North Division street.

Commissioners stated also that a War Department permit for the bridge expires February 7, and construction must be under way by then.

Post Contestants Suggest Many Appealing Uses for Oranges

First Prize Awarded To Vitamin Dessert

Fruit's Juice Found Useful for Basting Duck, Roasting Pork; Makes Hot Breads, Puddings Luscious

By The Post Food Editor.

ORANGES are available all through the year, but the big orange season starts in January. Orange juice has become the great American habit, and many persons think that breakfast without orange juice is unthinkable. The Post recipe contestants have innumerable ways of using oranges with which local markets are now so replete. They use orange juice in French dressings or as the liquid in making orange gelatine, or they baste roast duck with it or roast pork shoulders in a bath of it. They also make hot breads, puddings and cakes with oranges and find many more appealing uses for this fruit so generously endowed with vitamins.

Vitamin Special

When a very special dessert is needed, the winning recipe of Edith M. Stern, 20 Philadelphia avenue, Takoma Park, is one to be given a trial. Mrs. Stern wins the first award of $3 for this excellent orange expression. Following is her recipe:

Mrs. Stern

Orange Charlotte

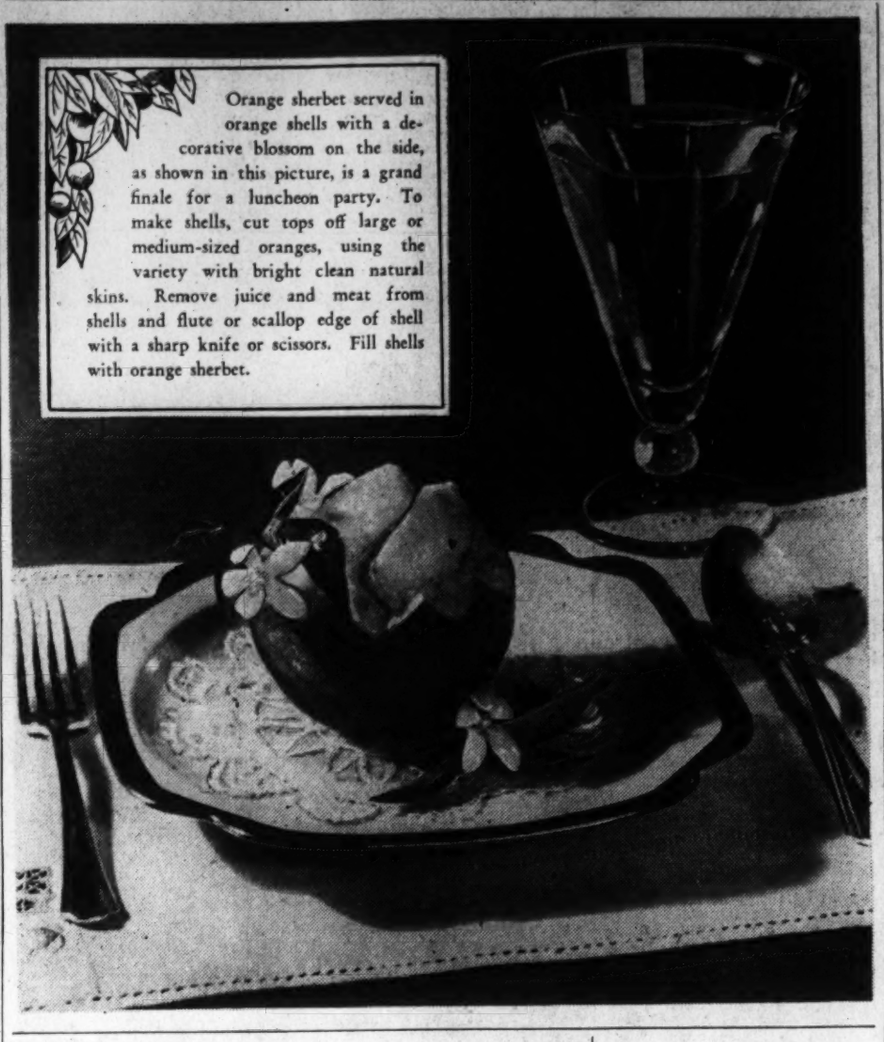
Dissolve 1 package orange gelatin mixture in 1 cup boiling water. And 2 tablespoons sugar, ⅛ teaspoon salt and 1 cup orange juice. Pour half of mixture in bottom of a mold, and chill until firm. When remaining liquid begins to thicken, whip until frothy and thick. Fold in the pulp of 2 oranges, well drained, and then ½ cup cream whipped. Pour into the mold.

Custom-Made

The winning recipe of Mrs. Libe Siegel, 2140 F street northwest, is one that may be served hot or cold for a meat accompaniment, or as a dessert by the addition of a marshmallow's being placed on each orange and browned before serving, or as a dish to be kept for future serving by sealing in sterilized jars. Mrs. Siegel wins a $2 award for the recipe, which follows:

Baked Whole Oranges

Slightly grate skin of 6 to 8 oranges. Boil the oranges for 30 minutes. Cool. This is done to make skin tender. Cut slice off blossom end of each orange. Remove core. Make a filling for oranges, using 1 teaspoon butter and 1 tablespoon sugar for each orange. Cover the oranges with a syrup made of 2 parts of water to 1 part of sugar. Bake closely covered at a moderate temperature, 375 degrees, from 1½ to 3 hours. Longer baking gives a darker fruit and one more like a preserve with a thicker syrup. If oranges are not completely covered by syrup, baste frequently.



Orange sherbet served in orange shells with a decorative blossom on the side, as shown in this picture, is a grand finale for a luncheon party. To make shells, cut tops off large or medium-sized oranges, using the variety with bright clean natural skins. Remove juice and meat from shells and flute or scallop edge of shell with a sharp knife or scissors. Fill shells with orange sherbet.

A First Nighter

"A cake that is always eaten the first night" is an orange one that Mrs. Kathryn Werber, 14 University road, Calvert Hills, Hyattsville, Md., submits in the contest this week and for which she wins $1. Mrs. Werber also says that it is dessert that will make a hit with all members of the family. Her recipe follows:

Mrs. Werber

Orange Cake

Cream 1 cup sugar and ½ cup butter. Add 2 eggs unbeaten and 2/3 cup sour milk or buttermilk with 1 teaspoon soda. Add 1 cup nuts, 1 cup raisins and the rind of 1 orange. Sift 2 cups flour with 1 teaspoon baking powder. Bake about 40 minutes in an angel food pan in an oven of 400 degrees. When taken from oven, pour the juice of 1 orange that has been mixed with ½ cup sugar over the top. Let set in pan until cool.

Bread Basket Special

Mrs. Albert Day, Auburn avenue, Bethesda, Md., uses the orange in combination with grapenuts to produce a delicious hot bread—Orange Muffins—and thereby wins a $1 award. The delicious flavor of the orange plus the crunchiness of the grapenuts makes an interesting and appealing combination. Following is Mrs. Day's recipe:

Mrs. Day

Orange Muffins

Sift flour and measure to 2 cups, add 3 teaspoons baking powder, 2/3 cup sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, and sift again. Combine 2 well-beaten eggs with ¾ cup orange juice and 1 tablespoon grated orange rind and 2 tablespoons melted butter or other shortening. Add to flour, beating only enough to dampen all flour. Add 1 cup grapenuts. Bake in hot, greased muffin pans in hot oven, 425 degrees, 20 to 25 minutes. Makes 12 muffins.

A Good Deal

Orange Rusks, as made by Mrs. Arthur Rhoads, 520 Elm street, Frederick, Md., will bring cheers from the lovers of hot breads. Mrs. Rhoads wins a $1 award with her recipe for Orange Rusks, and the following is her process for producing them.

Mrs. Rhoads

Orange Rusks

Soften 1½ cake yeast (fresh or dry) in ½ cup lukewarm water. Mix together 2 cups orange juice, ½ cup melted shortening, 2/3 cup sugar, 2 teaspoons salt, 2 beaten eggs, 1 teaspoon mace or ¼ teaspoon nutmeg or cardamon, and 2 tablespoons grated orange peel or shredded candied peel. Then add the yeast mixture and 8 cups flour. Beat well. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Stir the dough to break down the gas bubbles. Drop by spoonfuls into very well-buttered muffin pans, turning it over with spoon and fork to butter all surfaces. Let rise until very light. Bake in a hot oven, 450 degrees, for about 10 minutes, until golden brown. When slightly cooled, spread tops with a mixture of 1 cup powdered sugar, 1 teaspoon grated orange rind and ¼ cup orange juice. These may also be baked as clover-leaf rolls.

Nature's Plenty Helps to Ease Budget Strain

Hens Busy Producing; Egg Dishes Are Good Meat Substitute

By Martha Ellyn

The Post Food Editor.

APPETITES and food budgets are often strained after the holidays. To ease such a condition takes some planning, but not a great deal of effort. Nature has done considerable to help the food budget this year. The hens in the Middle West have waked up, it is said, and have started increased production. Since there has been a rumor that Easter has been pushed ahead next year, they probably did not want to be caught short, so they started piling up the egg supply. Whatever may be the reason, the increased supply has sent egg prices downward. Many grand dishes are made utilizing this valuable food.

Martha Ellyn

Hen's Contribution

Main course egg dishes to use in the place of meat are many and delicious. Curried eggs with chestnuts, a ham and egg pie, eggs poached in cheese sauce, eggs Creole, egg ragout, and omelets varied with ingredients such as chicken livers, chipped beef and olives, and polanaise are but a few of the tempting ways of cooking eggs. A souffle made with mushrooms is an interesting dish. Following is the recipe that Ann Fraser has used in her recently published book—"How'll You Have Your Eggs?"

Souffle With Mushrooms

Melt 3 tablespoons butter and add 3 tablespoons flour. Gradually pour in 2 cups of boiling milk. Stir well over fire until mixture leaves the side of pan, add 1 teaspoon salt and a few grains cayenne. Drop in 5 egg yolks, 1 at a time, adding the 5 stiffly beaten whites. Place cooked and creamed mushrooms in bottom of souffle dish. Cover with souffle mixture. Tie a band of buttered paper around to keep it from running over when it rises. Cook in a slow oven.

Pork Pointers

Pork prices are down, too. The producers in the hog and corn country may be worried, but it does not worry the homemaker, for fresh pork tenderloin is a pleasant change. There is no waste to these small lean pieces of loin and they are delicious broiled or pan fried, and are a deluxe dish when spread with dressing—either bread, apple or sweet potato. Sour cream further enhances the flavor of this dish. Following is a recipe taken from "The Joy of Cooking," by Irma S. Rombauer.

Baked Pork Tenderloin

Split a pork tenderloin lengthwise. Flatten it out and rub it lightly with garlic, if desired. Spread with any kind of dressing. Sew or tie it up. Season with salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Place the pork tenderloin in a pan with ½ cup sour cream. Bake in a hot oven 500 degrees for 15 minutes, reduce heat to 300 degrees and bake until tender, about 45 minutes. Baste frequently.

Among the Greens

The home dinner front is getting the advantage of less export orders because of war. New cabbage heads are rolling in abundantly from Florida, Norfolk and South Carolina. A cabbage a day may not keep the doctor away, but it'll provide cheap and interesting food that needn't become monotonous if served in the hundreds of fashions available. Probably our washday connotations, associated with a smelly mess of plain cabbage cooked with corned beef, have shorn this vegetable of its innate dignity.

Designers Busy Thinking Up Smart Ideas

New Chairs, Looking Like Glass, but Won't Break, Cause Stir

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

WE'VE heard so much about the depression the last few years that we got to thinking that everybody was on the rocks and that our own daily bread must then be on a sort of temporary parole. It was a nice surprise, on a recent trip across the country with stops here and there to visit old friends, to find all of them rocking along comfortably and some of them pleasantly prosperous. Yet when we last saw them they were all fresh from school, starting from scratch.

And when we got back home, the first person we encountered was a decorator in one of the East's proudest stores. And she was breathless over the success of a group of lucite boudoir chairs (that look like glass, but don't break). These chairs had gone like hot cakes at a paltry $95 apiece. In short, everybody isn't on relief, as we might get to thinking from all the talk we hear. Without minimizing the dire need of many or forgetting that there is a serious unemployment problem, it still wouldn't be amiss to try a little dose of prosperity propaganda. To talk about what's right with the country as well as what's wrong. Then those who have a few dollars won't be so afraid to spend it and that means more work for more people. We're not talking about the fabulously rich of whom there aren't many anyway . . . we just mean the people up and down any residence block who are doing well. And there are lots of them. Enough to keep bright decorators and designers busy thinking up smart new ideas for home decoration.

PASTEL PLAIDS—in dainty rooms hark back to days of bustles. We saw a charming bedroom of periwinkle blue, mauve and cream, with draperies in cream taffeta, with undercurcurtains, made to draw, in a pastel plaid taffeta. The swag valance was of this same plaid, as was the underskirt of a frou-frou dressing table festooned with sheer organza paniers.

MADE FOR EACH OTHER—a new series of popular priced cotton prints for draperies or furniture coverings are ensembled together so that two different materials can be used prominently in the same room while retaining the color harmonies and keeping the designs congenially correlated.

First Lady Advises On Public Speaking

Have Something to Say, Be Honest, And Be Certain to Have an Ending, Class of Congressional Wives Told

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

"Have something to say before you get up to speak," be honest, and make certain you have "terminal facilities" are admonitions of Mrs. Roosevelt to novices in public speaking.

Maybe they were not only for novices. She gave them yesterday in a talk at the opening of Mrs. Hugh Butler's class in public speaking for Congressional wives, at which she commended the idea of women learning to "think on their feet."

Training in public speaking is a measure of preparedness for the time likely to come in any woman's life today, said the First Lady, when she finds herself concerned with some public question on which it is necessary for her to express her views. She recalled her own experience in 1916, when she began making talks to workers in the Red Cross. Her real career as a public speaker began in 1921, she said.

"The younger generation, in schools and colleges, through debate and special training is learning to express itself," she said. "But the ideas you express in high school and college are probably not those you will want to express five years later."

Some people, she said, make the mistake of taking an antagonistic attitude rather than a conciliatory one. The speaker should try to make people feel they agree with him, whether or not they do, she advised.

Leave Something For Audience to Digest

She also emphasized the importance of having something to say. "Mere words are not going to remain long with your audience," she declared. "There is no excuse today for the kind of speech which takes time but leaves nothing to think about later. Unless you have something you really want to say, it is just as well not to get up."

She quoted the advice of a friend to her when she began speaking, to write out the introductory paragraphs of the talk and the conclusion (so as to be sure to have a way to close) and only to make notes on the rest. She advised never to write out all of a speech because of the importance of giving members of the audience the feeling you are thinking about them while you are talking. But organization of the material in one's mind or by an outline is always essential, she said.

Speakers nowadays must be prepared for questions from the audience, she added.

"When a question comes which you can not or do not care to answer you may often have to do what I do, and say: 'I'm very sorry, but I don't know," said Mrs. Roosevelt. "Never fumble and just use words. It annoys audiences and you feel ashamed afterwards at having done a shoddy thing.

"If asked an opinion on something to which you have not given thought, be honest, say: 'It is the first time this question has come to me and, as it seems to me now, I think so and so, and I may change my opinion later after more consideration. Do not give the answer as though it were final.

"The best thing any one of us can do is to give people the feeling we are trying to be absolutely honest. Conditions change and therefore our thinking about them may change.

'Be Honest,' First Lady Advises

"Be honest. It is not always easy, because you first must be honest with yourself about what you believe. In preparing a speech, put yourself in front of yourself, and say, 'What DO you think about this?'"

Mrs. William W. Whittington, wife of Representative Whittington, of Mississippi, who was president of the Congressional Club when the first public speaking class for Congressional wives was organized, presided. Mrs. John J. Sparkman, of Alabama, introduced Mrs. Roosevelt.

The class members who followed the First Lady on the program sat on the front row in the auditorium of Pierce Hall, Sixteenth and Harvard streets, where the session was held. Before the meeting opened they checked over their notes and kept a weather eye on the audience as the auditorium filled.

"Just too many females," remarked one of the younger women, as she viewed the assembly. "There are a few men," said her neighbor. I wish there were more. Men are so much more sympathetic than women.

"Have a cough drop," offered her companion, taking one herself. "I think my voice is likely to leave me any time."

Although there was no outward evidence of nervousness as the women spoke, they all admitted their knees still felt a little shaky.

Others on the program were Mrs. Harry Engelbright, of California; Mrs. Herman P. Eberharter, of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Fred Bradley, of Michigan; Mrs. C. Howland Chase, of the Junior League, and Mrs. Charles E. Harron, of California.

Miss Stellita Stapleton, of the Junior League, had her subject chosen for her by the audience, and spoke on "The Modern Woman."

Miss Skinner Is Trinity Guest

The women's auxiliary board of Trinity College last night gave a reception honoring Cornelia Otis Skinner, in the main building of the college, following her recital in the auditorium, which it sponsored for the benefit of the scholarship fund.

Mrs. Peter John McGovern, honorary president of the board, headed the receiving line with Miss Skinner, and was in charge of the reception. Others receiving with her were Mrs. Aubrey Fennell, president; Miss Florence Judge, vice president; Mrs. John F. Victory, secretary; Mrs. Henry I. Quinn, chairman of publicity; Miss Regis Boyle, assistant on that committee; Mrs. S. Dolan Donohoe, chairman of tickets, and Mrs. Frank Burke.

Miss Skinner's program of modern character sketches drew an audience of nearly 1,000 students and friends of the college, many of whom later greeted her at the reception.

Mission Hears Capt. Milliken On Alcoholism

Children of Drunkards Fare Better if From Poor Homes, She Says

Washington children with alcoholic parents are better off if they come from poverty-stricken homes, Capt. Rhoda Milliken, of the Women's Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Department yesterday afternoon told members of the Women's Guild of the Central Union Mission.

The law has never found any way to step in and remove children from the home with the alcoholic mother if every material comfort has been provided, she said, but children from hovels can be sent to institutions where order, cleanliness and sane living may be restored to their lives.

Capt. Milliken said that alcoholic women in this city constitute one of her chief problems at the bureau and about half of these are from the well-to-do class. Each year, she tells the Guild of work being done among women and children because the Central Union Mission, through its Children's Emergency Home, provides a haven for youngsters whose parents run into conflict with the law. The children are not eligible to the Police Department's Receiving Home for Children, which is for juvenile law violators.

The two reasons that the past year has been especially full of broken families and domestic situations here, said Capt. Middleton, are that able-bodied men, skilled or unskilled, find it so hard to get jobs and that it is so easy to get intoxicants without any money.

Increasing use of hospitals and scientific care for alcoholic women has not cut down the number of cases in that group. She said that the most encouraging feature of the work was the awakening of public cooperation and that of church organizations.

Reports from Mrs. Jean Bennett, superintendent of the Central Union Mission, indicated that December and its bitter weather had taxed the mission's capacity. The number of free meals for that month served to the men in the mission and the children in the home went to 15,137. The number for the last three months of 1939 went to approximately 20,000 free meals, which shows the great increase in the last month. She also reported that about 80 or 90 men sit up each night during the bitter weather as there are not enough beds in the mission dormitories to accommodate the applicants.

Mrs. William H. Ramsey, president of the Guild, presided, and about 45 members were present.

Mission to Mark Birthday Monday

The fourth anniversary of the Northeast Rescue Mission, at 1340 H street northeast, will be the occasion of a "Donation-Open House" celebration, Monday, from 2 to 5 o'clock at the mission headquarters. Gifts of money, clothing, groceries, will be used for underprivileged people to whom the mission ministers.

At 2:30 and at 4:30 o'clock, there will be two short historical intervals. Superintendent Thawley L. Holmes, and the Rev. William A. Emmons, one of the mission's founders and pastor of Maryland Avenue Baptist Church, will relate the story of the birth of the mission, showing how it has survived, without endowment or trust funds, until it has proved a haven for thousands of unfortunates in the Nation's Capital. Plans for 1940 will be discussed.

"Faith" is the keynote of the Northeast Rescue Mission. From 40 to 50 men every day are given two meals and free shelter. Shoes and clothing are provided as far as possible. Two afternoons each week are now devoted to mothers' and children's work.

District O. E. S. Opens 44th Annual Session

Lillian Zimmerman, Grand Marshal, Leads Procession

In a colorful and impressive setting of blue and silver, the forty-fourth annual session of the Grand Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star for the District, was opened at the Willard Hotel last evening by Paul B. Cromelin, past grand patron of the grand chapter and past grand master of Masons for the District.

The grand marshal, Miss Lillian Zimmerman, led the opening procession followed by color bearers, pages, the choral unit under the direction of Past Grand Patron Theodore C. Lewis, and the grand officers.

Mrs. Ruth S. Cromelin, the grand matron, wore a gown of white lame, and carried a shower bouquet of white and blue silver, with a white orchid in the center and a shower of silver stars falling from the bouquet on blue ribbon. All grand officers carried white muffs with blue and silver corsages on the front.

The 20 young women who served as pages were attired in long white gowns covered with long blue capes flecked with silver stars. They carried lighted torches mounted by stars and a shower of blue ribbon and silver stars decorated their wands. At each of the five points of the star was a massive stellar grouping.

Walter Fowler Reads Scripture

The star points of the grand chapter are: Doris F. Cope, Harriet E. Pollard, Elsie L. Douglas, Martha S. Kauffman and Blanche P. Power.

The grand organist, Hazel S. Shrode, led the accompaniment for the choral unit which sang "Open the Gates of the Temple," while the pages swung wide the temple gates in the grand east as Mrs. Cromelin and the grand patron, Richard E. Titlow, took their chairs.

Participating in the chapter ceremonies were Mrs. Minnie J. Burdine, associate grand matron; Edward C. Steagall, associate grand patron; Mrs. Rose A. Yost, grand secretary; Mrs. Willie McKenzie, grand treasurer; Miss Mildred M. Hicks, grand conductress; Mrs. Hazel R. Engelbrecht, associate grand conductress; Miss Nellie Mae Anderson, grand chaplain; Mrs. Marie E. Teachum, grand lecturer; Mrs. Carrie Batson, grand warder, and Mr. Clarence M. Kiefer, grand sentinel.

As the grand officers assumed their stations, a rain of silver stars was released, the lights were dimmed to a soft blue and the open Bible was placed on the altar while Selma Klein sang. This was followed by a Scripture reading by Past Grand Patron Walter L. Fowler.

Mrs. Mary Teachum Is Paid Tribute

A feature of the occasion was the tribute paid to Mrs. Mary Teachum, who has been a member of the Eastern Star of the District for 41 years and most of that time has served as grand lecturer. Mrs. Cora P. Mayberry, past grand matron, told of her work in the order and Miss Mildred Hicks presented her a bouquet of roses. She was the founder of the Order of Job's Daughters, composed of daughters of Masons and Eastern Star members, and is affectionately known as "Mother Teachum."

At the sessions on Friday evening the election of officers for the year will be announced and further business transacted, including the report of the activities of the Auxiliary Temple Board by Mrs. Madella L. Smith, president.

The Vice President Suspends His Social Rules Briefly For Hasty Visit to White House Reception for Congress

Garners Are Rewarded for Late Hours By View of 1940 Possibilities at Gayest And Glimpses of Capital New Styles

Like a streak of lightning, the Garners then made their way through the Red Room and toward the door. "We're a-goin' home," said the V. P. over his shoulder. As his wife stopped to say good-by to one or two friends, he called back, gayly, "You'd better come on;" then chuckled in an aside, "It looks like I've lost me a good woman!" Presently, they had disappeared.

Senator, Mrs. McNary Leave Party Early

The Senate Minority Leader and Mrs. Charles L. McNary, who were also among the dinner guests, had preceded them out the door by several minutes. They did not go down the receiving line.

Meanwhile, the reception was getting off to a three-ring circus start. "Genial Jim" Farley was there, with friends clustered around him three-deep most of the evening. Also holding a nice slice of the spotlight was Secretary of State Hull. In fact, Presidential possibilities and possible possibilities were generously sprinkled through the throng that turned out to be the most colorful White House event this season.

Party lines were down as big league Republicans and Democrats rubbed shoulders, exchanged smiles and greetings and generally got in training for the big fight of 1940. Senate Majority Leader Barkley was here, there, and everywhere during the earlier half of the reception. House Majority Leader San Rayburn came down the line with Minority Leader Joe Martin. Wreathed in smiles, they parted when they got to the door of the dining room and then each went his separate way, collecting a crowd en route.

Firm handshakes and lusty backslaps, that make friends and influence voters, punctuated the party all the way from the East Room to the State Dining Room and back again. First names rippled through the crowd like gentle breezes over a wheat field, and sweetness and light were all over the place.

Mrs. Grayson Is Center of Attention

The same scarlet-coated Marine Band flourished in its palmy bower; the same snappy parade attendant on the massing of the colors preceded the general receiving. But as the long guest line snaked itself toward the Blue Room, where President and Mrs. Roosevelt greeted their guests, an air of informality that rarely accents State receptions was very much in evidence. Joy was unconfined, and so was some plain and fancy political fence-patching, as the party got gayly under way.

Dinner guests hailed the passing line from the hallowed precincts of the Red Room. Several times, Senators and their wives stopped long enough to greet friends there before going on to the dining room. Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, turned out in black, was the center of special attention in the Red Room during the entire party.

During the latter half, the inner circle followed the Postmaster General's example and expanded into the State Dining Room, where the all-American company enjoyed a type of old-home celebration you can find only in a democracy.

Something of a convention atmosphere must have pervaded the dinner, for the reception started late. It was 10 minutes past 9 before the band struck up "Hail to the Chief," and the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, with the Cabinet—almost full force—made their appearance. The First Lady was a striking picture in her gown of exquisite cream lace, with a long train.

Darkly lovely, Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, was gowned in white brocade cut on classic lines. An emerald clip at the neckline was the only touch of color, and she wore three strands of pearls. A regal black velvet frock, edged about the decolletage with tulle, was chosen by Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, who was accompanied by the Secretary of the Treasury. Next in line were the Secretary of War, Harry Woodring, and Postmaster General Farley, who escorted one another into the red room.

Petite Mrs. Charles Edison, chic as always, wore a white angel-skin gown with a bodice of bands of red and green embroidered velvet. The Secretary of Agriculture escorted Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, whose gold lame frock, cut on simple lines, was most becoming. A large gold kid flower enlivened the purple crepe frock of the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins' gown of purple crepe. She was escorted by the retiring Attorney General, Frank Murphy, whose nomination to the Supreme Court was approved yesterday by a subcommittee of the Senate.

Two Governors Attend Event

Coming down the line early in the evening were Gov. James H. Price of Virginia and Mrs. Price. Another State executive on hand was Gov. R. C. McMullen of Delaware, who was accomanied by Mrs. McMullen. Senator Arthur Capper escorted pretty Marsha Hatch to the reception. Senator and Mrs. Carl A. Hatch were there also. Sipping the punch and chatting with a group of friends were Senator and Mrs. Key Pittman. Mrs. Pittman's gown, one of the loveliest there, was of antique lace encircled with bands of cream satin about the skirt.

Senatorial solons doffed their dignity and had the time of their lives. Representatives, of whom several still appear at State receptions in "black-tie" attire, talked as freely (and as loudly) as if they were in the House chamber. Nobody watched the lock, and nobody except the Garners and the McNarys edged near the door with a going-home look until long past the usual Congressional bedtime.

Senate and House hostesses, turned out in their flossiest finery, held little courts of their own as the crowd eddied and flowed around the long punch and cookie table stretching across one side of the State dining room. Perhaps the only one in the gathering who had on a dress three years old was black-garbed Mrs. Garner, who frankly admits shopping is a bore, and who prides herself on buying clothes that can be worn season in and season out.

Mrs. William B. Bankhead, who accompanied the Speaker of the House, made fashion headlines in a white crepe frock, set off with tiers of fringe. Making the party rounds with the Senate majority leader was Mrs. Barkley, trimly turned out in gray crepe with coral accents.

Lady Lawmakers Add Sparkle

Several fashion notes were chalked off by the lady legislators, who were belles of the evening. Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, greeting friends—Democrats and Republicans alike—on all sides, had on an aquamarine crepe model, made with a full skirt and embroidered in silver. Representative Mary T. Norton was a stately figure in white lame set off with a gardenia corsage, and Representative Caroline O'Day wore black crepe with a lace panel down the back and kept herself cool with a matching ostrich fan. Representative Jessie Sumner, all smiles, seemed to know everybody, man and woman, in the entire gathering, and probably shook more hands during the evening than did all the other ladies put together. Her black velvet frock, cut on classic lines, was accented with red slippers, a red handbag, and a red and white bow on the bustle back.

The newest feminine legislator, Representative Clara McMillan, was among those missing. She says her schedule now is so heavy she "cannot accept any social invitations."

One of the prettiest frocks there was worn by Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, who had chosen a white jersey number with dark blue panels of the same material down the skirt. White taffeta studded with rhinestones and set off with a crystal necklace was chosen by Mrs. William H. King, and Mrs. D. Worth Clark stepped out in a cloud of white embroidered chiffon with a rhinestone encrusted bodice. Accompanying her was her sister, Mrs. Lucille Strong, gowned in black velvet.

Black and White Predominate

For the most part, Congressional hostesses seem to have gone in for black or white with a touch of color here and there to brighten the effect. Mrs. John Bankhead for example had accents of red on the sash of her black velvet frock trimmed in rhinestones. Mrs. Joseph O'Mahoney's full-skirted frock of black crepe had a sequin-covered fitted bodice. Mrs. William H. Smathers appeared in black velvet with a jacket beaded in gold and coral and a coral camellia corsage; and fashionable Mrs. Ralph Church had chosen black velvet with white lace edging the top of the bodice.

Mrs. Ralph O. Brewster was gowned in black lace, worn with diamond clips and red camellias, and still another black lace frock was the one worn by Mrs. Nat Patton, who had a corsage of Talisman roses and silver accessories. Accompanying Representative and Mrs. Patton was their daughter, Bonnie, whose black taffeta frock was fashioned with a full skirt and a tight bodice.

A bright splash of color was the handsome gown worn by Mrs. Joseph Byrns, jr., who was smartly turned out in red velvet, and East Indian turquoise and gold jewelry. Mrs. John J. Dempsey, in pink lace and net, came down the line with Representative Dempsey who could open a dress shop any time he chose on the strength of picking out that pretty frock for his wife.

Mrs. Sol Bloom, in violet taffeta with puffed sleeves and a billowing skirt, left off trying to keep track of her popular husband early in the evening and gathered a group of friends around her in the Red Room. Mrs. Scott Lucas was an attractive picture in green and silver lame, made with a bustle back, and Mrs. James J. Hughes appeared in navy blue net sprinkled with royal blue sequins. Accompanying her and Senator Hughes was their daughter, Mrs. James T. Martin, in champagne starched net, sprinkled with star sequins.

Chatting merrily were Senator Joseph Guffey and his sister Pauletta. Others there included Representative and Mrs. Richard Duncan, accompanied by their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Duncan, jr. Clark B. Keeler escorted Miss Elizabeth Dudley to the reception. Two large gardenias were pinned to the shoulder of Miss Dudley's royal blue taffeta frock. Miss Lena Belle High had donned a fetching black velvet frock with a sweeping skirt lined in crinoline. Representative Joseph E. Casey arrived with his pretty blonde wife, who had on black satin.

Other Style Highlights

Other fashion notes were made by:

Miss Reba Doughton, who accompanied her father, Representative Robert L. Doughton, and who was gowned in gray crepe made on Grecian lines with an accordion plaited skirt and gold accents.

Mrs. Lansdale Sasscer, whose frock of Eleanor blue crepe was fashioned with a flaring skirt and orchid sequin straps over the shoulders.

Mrs. William Barry, in turquoise jersey with a full skirt and a silver and turquoise jacket.

Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, who had chosen a deep rose metallic jersey model, made on classic lines with a shirred bodice.

Mrs. Fritz G. Lanham, in full skirted gold lame with a fitted waist.

Mrs. Clarence Lea, who appeared in cyclamen velvet with a flared skirt and a smocked bodice.

Still others whose costumes I noted were Mrs. Frank H. Buck, who stepped out in pale pink satin with a pink brocaded jacket; Mrs. W. R. Poage in a "Gone With The Wind" frock made of beige rose slipper satin and a very full skirt; Mrs. Jerry Voorhis, gowned in purple crepe, set off with rhinestone pockets; Mrs. Ed Gossett, in powder blue net, fashioned with a wide skirt and a scroll appliqued bodice; and Mrs. Harry Englebright in coral chiffon with a draped bodice and a very full skirt.

Louisa Clement To Bow June 13 At Sulgrave Club

Next season's debutantes, better organized than ever before in the social history of Washington, are continuing to set the dates far in advance for their coming-out parties.

Latest addition to the ranks is Miss Louisa Catherine Adams Clement, daughter of Mrs. Donald C. Bingham, of Chevy Chase, Md. Now a freshman at Bryn Mawr, Miss Clement will bow at a reception on Thursday, June 13.

Debutantes Meet at Dinner Dance After Post-Holiday Lull

The debs, who have had somewhat of a lull since the holidays, met for a gay party last evening when Mrs. Thomas Richard Cowell entertained at a dinner dance in honor of Miss Marilynn Himes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Himes, of Washington and Frederick, Md.

The party took place at the 1925 F Street Club. The guests were seated at several tables, one for Mrs. Cowell and her friends, and the others for the debutantes. A magician did tricks in a show beginning at midnight.

Sra. de Munilla Buffet Hostess

Senora de Munilla, whose ability to dispense genial hospitality is well known, chalked up another successful party yesterday afternoon. Receiving between 5 and 7 o'clock, the hostess had selected a black satin frock and shirred jacket for the occasion. A pale-tinted orchid completed her ensemble.

The Munilla apartment, which is decked with Spanish shawls, exquisite tapestries and huge Spanish urns, was filled yesterday afternoon with guests who dropped in to sip tea, or punch and partake of the buffet.

Elsa Maxwell Coming Here to Lecture On Laughter and Help Create Some

ON ELSA MAXWELL'S forthcoming visit to Washington, the famous party-giver who numbers her friends by the hundreds, will stop with Mrs. Nicholas Longworth. The latter is planning to entertain for her during her stay.

Mrs. Longworth and Miss Maxwell, both of whom are now lecturers, have known one another for many years. Mrs. Longworth recently returned from a tour of the country in which she talked of "everything," and Miss Maxwell is coming to the Capital to lecture at the Town Hall meeting of February 11 on "The Science of Laughter." In some of her recent lectures she has asked the women in the audience to don strange gadgets, such as funny hats, etc., so it will be interesting to see what she produces for Washington.

Miss Maxwell has not visited the Capital since about three years ago, when she came down for a dance given by the late Forbes Morgan and Mrs. Morgan. At that time she stayed with Mrs. John Gross, who was then Mrs. James F. Curtis.

A CERTAIN well-known bachelor about town offered to help a house-hunting friend by keeping her dog for a week or two in his Georgetown apartment. As the young man has a job, he asked another girl in the apartment building if she would mind walking the pup and if she would buy some meat for the animal's supper.

Early that evening the dog-walker's phone rang and it was the bachelor's maid. "Mr. X wants to know if by any chance the hamburger you bought was of decent quality. He has some guests coming unexpectedly for supper, and there's no food in the house." P. S.—It was the dog, not the guests, who went supperless that night.

While on the subject of dogs, though Mrs. John Hay Whitney didn't crash the movies herself, her favorite pet is appearing in films. "Spookie," her Langolian, 3 inches by 8, has a role in fashion shorts for a New York studio. A Whitney chauffeur drives him to work and calls for him when the day's job is over.

GEORGETOWN BACHELORS provide, as readers of this column are beginning to realize, an endless fund of peculiar stories. Another we know who lives next to an old ladies' home was giving a cocktail party which could be heard for blocks around. Finally there came a knock on the door, and one of the maids from the home stood outside with a bottle of gin which, it seems, someone had misguidedly sent one of the old ladies for Christmas.

"She heard the noise and thought maybe you could use this," said the maid.

Now our friend is busy searching the bookshops for a detective story for his benefactor, as he has been told this is her favorite reading material.

IF ANY MORE lecturers come over from England this year, the competition will become positively cut-throat. Latest planning a tour of the United States, we hear, is Sir Alfred Frankenstein, for many years Austrian Minister to Great Britain. When Austria was grabbed by Hitler, the diplomat stayed on in London, and was knighted by the King. He has a pretty English wife about 30 years younger than he who will accompany him. However, the Frankenstein visit will not take place for several months.

MISS EDITH CLARKE, of London, is stopping at the Sulgrave Club for a week. Though originally from New Orleans, she makes her home in the British capital, in the house on Devonshire Terrace which Charles Dickens once owned and where he wrote "David Copperfield."

THE 9-YEAR-OLD daughter of a prominent diplomat was so impressed with the account of the recent Ruth Draper benefit here for Polish relief that she telephoned the chairman, Mrs. Frank Simonds, and asked if a dollar which she had saved from her allowance was too small a sum to help. Mrs. Simonds, needless to say, said that no bit was too small for the cause.

Girl Returns Man's Ring at Mother's Insistence; Should He Talk to Mother or Forget the Girl?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 20 years old and have been going with a girl of 18 for over a year. We kept steady company from the beginning and at Christmas I gave her an engagement ring, with the understanding that we would wait two years anyway before considering marriage, as I am working and also going to night school at present and thus am not yet ready to support a wife.

The girl's mother stopped speaking to me after I had given her the ring. She was offended because I had not given the ring in her presence. (She is Italian by birth, as I am, but that is her belief—that an engagement ring should be given in the presence of the girl's mother.)

The other day, the girl's mother told me either to marry the girl then and there or stay away until I am ready to marry her. The girl works and helps support her family and obeys her mother's wishes in every respect—so much so that when she is on a date with me, she must be home by 9 o'clock; and if it is Sunday or a holiday, she can't go out after 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Yesterday the girl returned my ring because her mother said she should. She is so confused. I don't believe she wants to oppose her mother, yet unless she opposes her, she won't be able to see me. What I would like to know is this—should I try to talk to her mother and make her understand my position concerning marriage? Or should I try to forget the girl? I would greatly appreciate a reply by Friday of this week, as I shall see the girl then for a final decision. J. C.

Brave Persistence Overcomes Obstacles

DEAR J. C.: You must be accounted a distressingly faint hearted suitor, who is none too sure either of his social worth or the rightness of his choice of a wife-to-be if you would forthwith abandon your long-range marriage plans in this instance, simply because the girl's mother is harshly unsympathetic to the idea.

It seems to me that the first reaction of a "go-getting" young man to such a preliminary reversal at the hands of a domineering mother would be a cool determination to wear down the opposition and carry his point eventually, through sheer patient persistence and consistently praiseworthy performance in the role of matrimonially-minded sweetheart.

While it is impossible for me to define the exact nature of this mother's antagonistic reaction to your attempt to bind her daughter to an indefinite engagement, one may surmise either (1) that she doubts the sincerity of your intentions; or (2) that she assumes you never will be able to support her daughter in the style which the mother deems adequate and suitable; or (3) that she is selfishly resolved to keep the daughter bound to her apron strings for the purpose of exploiting her earning capacity.

However, this we know: (1) you can only prove the sincerity of your intention by persevering manfully in the face of every obstacle. (2) You can best demonstrate your ability to provide by carrying on with your present job and night school education to the point where, some few years hence, you will not only be equipped for—but perhaps in possession of—the dreamed-of better job that does represent economic security.

And (3) if the mother must be dealt with as a matriarchal tyrant who seems bent on keeping her daughter a perennial "child laborer" in the family vineyards, you should steel yourself to play a waiting game that employs Time as your ally. Since you cannot undertake marriage—even with parental blessing—for at least two years more anyway, the interval of waiting should properly be devoted to winning the merited confidence of the girl's whole family.

In the meantime, she will be maturing to the age where she is no longer legally or socially obliged to kowtow to her parents. If your love remains steadfast and confident during this period, she will grow to share your idea of the inevitability of marriage, and will eventually find the courage to defy her mother, if necessary, in order to reward your optimism and claim a grown woman's way of living for herself.

Whatever is worth having is worth waiting for and fighting for. Rome, as has been said, wasn't built in a day. It is a dismaying commentary upon many modern youngsters that they expect most brands of success and happiness to fall into their laps for the asking. And where tentative aspirations are bluntly denied, they are rather too apt to strike a "sour grapes" attitude or to blame Unkind Fate for their failures.

My advice to you is to avoid this type of mistake. And the way to avoid it, in this instance, is to pursue your own suggestion of "trying to talk to the girl's mother and make her understand (your) position concerning marriage." Incidentally as a kind of credo of success, may I pass on to you the following verse, which was sent me some months ago by another correspondent:

"Success is the sum of small efforts,
Repeated day in and day out,
With never a thought of frustration
And never a moment of doubt.
Whatever your cherished ambition,
Begin now to make it come true,
Through efforts repeated, untiring,
Plus faith in the thing that you do."

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

Gable's First Wife To Teach Voice At Columbia, Mo.

New York, Jan. 11.

THE red-headed Josephine Dillon, voice coach and, purely incidentally, the first wife of Clark Rhett Gable, had many interesting things to tell us about feminine speech before she shoved off to give a three-month course at Christian College in Columbia, Mizzo.

Alice Hughes

Miss Josephine, who is a native Californian and who studied a spot of acting in Italy, is convinced that what is broadly known as a Middle Western accent is one of the chief foes of beautiful speech by American womanhood. She also blasts those clipped short A's of Bostonese, but she failed to mention the speech of the South. The voice business has all sorts of nicknames for various types of speech, and Miss Dillon's favorite is what her trade calls "The Park Avenue." She says this sort of talk is not only good for stage and screen people, but is the best all-around bet for the general run of our girls.

According to this expert, there are 52 dialects spoken in this town. I've never tried to count them, but I know I have heard at least that many, from the Brooklyn habit of calling an oyster an 'erster" to the utter inability of the Bronx citizen to pronounce the letter "R." Or maybe, unwillingness. Josephine says that many of these odd dialects have contributed to the trade brand called "Park Avenue." There is nothing smart-alecky or affected about such speech, like the mouthful-of-mush talk of English stage juveniles. It is probably good, workable and tasteful American speech. No phony broad "A's."

Miss Dillon has only nice words for Gable, whom she met not long after he left Cadiz, Ohio, for the western world. She says he spoke with a Pennsylvania Dutch accent and slaved faithfully to eradicate it for the stage. She admires the Big Boy and is happy at his current success. What will happen when she descends on Missouri to teach "Park Avenue," I refuse to predict.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN — New York is a very nosey town and is never happy until it has yanked any visiting "celebrities" into the open spotlight and stared and fawned its fill. But that eminent engaged couple, Vivien Scarlett O'Hara Leigh and Laurence Wuthering Heights Olivier, have certainly kept well out of sight for the past couple of weeks. I hear, through spies, that they are planning a Shakespearian repertory season as soon as it can be arranged, and that they especially want to do "Romeo and Juliet." And they should be all right, too, in this soggy saga of mooncalf love.

Calls 'Park Avenue Accent' the Best To Imitate

The week's neatest chuckle in the "society" columns here: Referring to the current sturdy appearance of one Mrs. Charlie Fair, the gossiper says, "She hasn't looked so well since she was the second wife of Jack Rutherford!"

ONE war never ends—the battle against feminine tonnage. Dorothy Tomlinson, copy-writer for a big ad agency, tells me she and her girl friends are reducing on a new type of bread thought up by some Hollywood diet faddists. It's stirred up with vegetable and fruit juices and other ingredients, which will fill but don't fatten.

Today's Social Notes

(From the Truthtown Torch)

Mr. and Mrs. Roswell Clymer entertained at one of their small, exclusive supper dances last night at the Plush Sofa Club. Dance music was furnished by Danny Dizzle's swing orchestra. Other entertainment was by the Raven Trio; Ham and Ham, of the Slapdash Circuit; Mimi Monk, torch singer, and Cleo, the masked fan dancer. The 500 or more socialites who attended remained until an early hour this morning.

Among the Esthetes

One of the most brilliant audiences ever assembled in Truthtown attended the concert last night given by the Flowing Mane String Quartet with Madame Skyki-Sapolio as guest soloist.

Among those occupying boxes were Mrs. Ted Flitterjig, former night club dancer who recently became the fifth wife of the local millionaire playboy; Mr. and Mrs. Parmalee Dummer and their debutante daughter, Miss Dorothy Dummer, who has been sent home from Miss Snipp's Academy to spend the rest of the winter with her parents; Rep. and Mrs. Patrick (Plain Pat) Clinker; Mrs. Reginald Flytie, socialite-career woman, who has recently opened a nursery school for Pekingese puppies; Col. Artemus Stepp, who in spite of his four-score years, is a familiar figure on local dance floors, and who was accompanied by Miss Babe Google; Mrs. Chauncey Drone, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Tootsie Drone, and Pete (Jitterbug) Cheesit; Dr. Cecil (Speed) Spidgeon, dashing bachelor, bon vivant gourmet, man about town and son of the late Sam Spidgeon, millionaire garter manufacturer; the Countess Umpsky, noted continental beauty, who is here representing Turtle House cosmetics; Mrs. Brown-Smythe-Jones-Green, who has recently returned from Reno and who was accompanied by her house guest, Miss Eloise Jenks-Duffer, actress-aviatrix-figure skater; Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Stuffer, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Van Zany, Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Looney and many others.

Mrs. Preen—Well, my sinus is bothering me again——

Hostess—How grand! . . . Oh, here's Mrs. Pouch! I'm so glad to see you!

Mrs. Pouch—I'm sorry I'm late, but Mr. Pouch was called out of town——

Hostess—How fortunate! . . . Oh, Mrs. Chipp! You're not going this early?

Mrs. Chipp—Yes, my mother-in-law and my two sisters-in-law are arriving tonight——

Hostess—How delightful! Oh, Mrs. Jenks, don't rush off!

Mrs. Jenks—I have to get to a committee meeting——

Hostess—I'm so glad! . . . Oh, you aren't leaving, Mrs. Smart?

Winter Silhouette Proves to Be Like Cigarette

Paris (AP).—"Cigarette silhouette," just launched in Paris burned holes in widely held theories that winter fashions would spread. Spread-skirted models were in the minority. Straight lines triumphed, though broken through here and there with an apron front, flounced overskirts or bustled backs. Coats got down to narrow widths and jackets to longer lengths and a new straight slimness, dubbed "cigarette."

Only the hips went out of bounds in Schiaparelli's new collection. They took on folds or puffs of draperyfront and back in day and evening frocks. Jackets had puffed-out hems running parallel with similar puffs in suit skirts. Suits were fur-banded at the hips and evening jackets were treated to hip wreaths of velvet flowers with tinsel centers.

Muffs played outstanding roles. They were tied around evening dresses with ribbon belts. They were beaded, embroidered, or made of the dress materials. In day wear the stomacher muffs were attached to jackets in fur or fabric.

Your Figure, Madame

Arm Exercise Will Develop Both Lungs and Bust

Backstroke, as Used in Swimming, Is Best For Toning Muscles; Most Effective in Water, But Works Successfully in Bedroom

By Ida Jean Kain

REMEMBER when you used to stand before an open window, throw out your chest, take the fresh air in big doses? Nowadays it is generally acknowledged that being exposed to the ozone is not enough!

You can't use more oxygen unless your circulatory system needs it and the need has to be created by use of the muscles. As soon as you exercise vigorously, you begin to use several times as much oxygen as when at rest.

But although we gave up "deep breathing" with that familiar open-window stance, we still favor "respiratory exercises." Strictly speaking, these might be any kind of exercises—even running! But we usually think of them in terms of special exercises for the arms, shoulders and chest, which tend to develop both a good pair of lungs and the fashionable feminine figure.

Swimming More Effective

Since the muscles of the shoulder girdle are correlated in action, an exercise for one part improves all three. The vigorous backward and upward swing of the arms which strengthens the pectorals supporting the bust also firms the triceps on the backs of the upper arms and straightens the shoulders.

The backstroke as used in swimming is one of the best exercises of this type. It is most effective in water because of the resistance offered by the water. But it works extremely well as an exercise. Just try it for a couple of months! Stand erect, head high, arms down at sides. Then circle alternate arms back, up, around and down, moving the entire shoulder girdle in the effort.

Here's another version—and one which, at the same time, whittles down the waistline!

Follow Chopping Motion

Stand erect, with both arms back and up over one shoulder, as if you were going to chop wood. Now, bring the arms down in a stroke so forceable that the arms are swung back up over the other shoulder. Chop down again, and circle back and up to the starting position. Just keep it up for 25 counts. As you chop and swing, try to keep the hips perfectly still so as to get in a twist for the waist!

All the arm and shoulder exercises are valuable in toning the muscles which support the bust and the skin which surrounds this area, as well as in filling out a shallow chest. If you want to reduce the size of this measurement, however, the weight must be lowered through a diet. In this case, exercise becomes important as a supplement to prevent sagging of the tissues as weight is lost.

Because of the increased demand for oxygen in exercise, a circulation of fresh air really is necessary. You should have the windows open a little way from top and bottom, but the room may be as warm as you like.

Tampering With Juror Charged

Woman Sitting In Numbers Case Says Someone Approached Her

Tampering with a member of a jury which was trying two alleged numbers operators was charged in District Court yesterday.

Exposure of the charges followed a report of Mrs. Thelma House Geraci, a juror, that a man approached her Wednesday.

Prosecutors opened an investigation immediately after the jury was found hopelessly deadlocked, and discharged.

The alleged tampering occurred while nine men and three women jurors were hearing evidence against Alfred Jones, 30, and Jeff Thomas, 29, both colored, who were seized in a police numbers raid September 15.

The case was given to the jury at 11:40 a. m. yesterday. An hour later Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue called the jurors into court, as a result of a message from the jury room.

The jury foreman, Eugene A. Barry, 44, realty man, rose in the box and asked permission to come to the bench, to speak privately with the court. Justice O'Donoghue told Barry to speak up in open court.

Foreman Reports Charge

"I want to report to your honor," said Barry, "that one of the lady jurors tells me she was approached yesterday."

"Which one was it?" asked the judge.

Barry indicated Mrs. Geraci, 34-year-old housewife of 431 Thirteenth street northeast.

"Did anything happen which would prevent her serving as a juror?" O'Donoghue asked.

Barry replied that Mrs. Geraci told the man who approached her that she could not discuss the case. Justice O'Donoghue sent the jurors back to their deliberations.

Nothing more could be done for several hours, while the jurors discussed the case, with deputy marshals on guard outside.

After three and a half hours, Barry reported to the court that there was no hope of agreement on a verdict, and the jurors were discharged.

John J. Wilson, chief of the criminal division of the district attorney's staff, had joined Assistant District Attorney William S. Tarver at the prosecution table to investigate the jury tampering charge.

O'Donoghue told them "to take up the matter that was brought up this morning."

Secret Conference Held

Wilson and Tarver went into secret conference with Barry, Mrs. Geraci and possibly other persons.

David A. Pine, District attorney, kept in touch with developments and went over the facts with his assistants late yesterday.

"Mr. Wilson and Mr. Tarver have instituted an investigation," Pine said, "but there can be no announcement while their work is in progress, and then not until a full report has been made to Justice O'Donoghue."

Jones and Thomas were indicted on six charges of selling numbers bets and one of operating a lottery. The prosecutors expected to try Jones and Thomas again, before a new jury, next month. Meanwhile, the men remained free on bond.

Tampering with a District Court jury previously was charged a year ago in the trial of members of the $2,000,000 Warring numbers gang for criminal conspiracy. Emmitt Warring, former numbers baron, is serving a 26-month sentence for criminal contempt of court in connection with the tampering. John B. Upperman, former deputy United States marshal, is serving a year in jail for taking bribes to influence the jurors he was supposed to guard against outside influences.

Boy Lost in Station Turns Out to Be Son of Soldier

Six-year-old Eddie Hale was still happy yesterday, though he turned out to be Eddie Teets instead. He was safe with his parents, Army Private First Class Henry E. Teets, and his pretty wife Lula at their home, 819 Alabama avenue southeast, after spending all day Wednesday at Union Station with his Christmas toys.

It turned out that the Teets couple had expected their son, who had been visiting in Florida, to arrive at 5:45 a. m. yesterday instead of the same time Wednesday, when he blithely stepped from a Florida train.

They had asked a friend to meet Eddie and imagine their surprise when they saw his picture in yesterday's Post.

Least concerned of all in the comedy of errors was Eddie himself, who had the time of his life with passengers, trainmen, messenger boys and redcaps while the Travelers Aid sought desperately to locate his parents.

Kiwanis Inducts Past President

Immediate Past President Eddie Pardoe, of the Washington Kiwanis Club, yesterday joined 11 past presidents at the club's luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel. The ceremony was directed by Past President John J. Boobar.

Pardoe presented President Frank Peckham with an instrument which will flash when speakers exceed time limits. Martie Wiegand, second vice president, presented Pardoe with a gift from the club. Past presidents in the ceremony included Mark Lansburg, Claude Owen, Harry Kimball, Claude Woodward, Edgar Morris, Jim Edmunds, George Mangan, Dewey Zirkin, Bynum Hinton, Lewis Breuninger and Gene Adams.

Sen. Overton To Seek Accord On Lump Sum

Understanding Now With House Would Avert Conference Delay

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, yesterday expressed the hope that another battle between the Senate and House over the Federal lump sum payment to the District will be avoided this year.

Just returned to the Capitol, Senator Overton said he would try to obtain an agreement with the new House sub-committee chairman who will handle the District supply bill, before hearings begin.

In past years the Senate and House sub-committee chairman have reached similar accords so as to forestall a controversy after the supply bill had passed both chambers and gone to conference.

Caldwell May Be Convinced

Representative Caldwell (Democrat), of Florida, who heads the House sub-committee, said after his appointment that while he had previously favored a $5,000,000 Federal payment he "might be convinced" that the $6,000,000 recommended by the Budget Bureau is acceptable.

Senator Overton, who accepted the $6,000,000 compromise only after a vigorous fight for $8,000,000 or a stable fiscal formula, indicated he is ready to renew the battle if necessary.

Would Accept $6,000,000.

If the House agrees to the $6,000,000 figure, however, he said he would accept.

Senator Overton said he hoped to provide funds in the District supply bill for the replacement of more obsolete schools this year. Last year he wrote into the appropriations measure an authorization for a study of school construction needs.

He commended the report of the Fire Survey Board, which recommends substantial economies.

Rabbi Metz to Speak

Services tonight at Adas Israel Synagogue will be dedicated to the Junior National Council of Jewish Women, Rabbi Solomon H. Metz speaking on "Isaiah, His Message and Significance." Mrs. Edith Cooper will lead a forum on "Peace and What We Can Do About It" after the service.

Lieut. Varney, Of D. C. Police, Asks to Retire

Police Lieut. Frank A. Varney, one-time detective and former president of the Policemen's Association, has requested retirement "because of physical disability," it was learned at Police Headquarters yesterday.

VARNEY

On sick leave because of varicose veins, Varney forwarded his request to Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, personnel officer. He must undergo an examination by the police surgeons, Edwards stated, and added that the doctors have the power to grant or reject the petition.

One-time aide to Former Commissioner Crosby, Varney came to the police department from the Navy in 1922. Before he had completed his probationary period, he was promoted to the rank of precinct detective and in 1926, less than a year later, was made a detective sergeant.

Transferred to Commissioner Crosby's office he remained there until he was promoted to lieutenant in 1930. Crosby's commendation of Varney was so impressive that the entire letter was made a part of the lieutenant's service record.

For the last year, Varney, who is 43, has been attached to the Fourth Precinct. He has received many commendations, among them one from President Roosevelt and the King and Queen of England for his service during the royal visit last year.

Father of two children, Varney lives at 3017 Channing street northeast.

John J. Agnew, an acting lieutenant, but with the Civil Service rating of a sergeant, is first on the eligibility list for promotion. He probably will be named to fill Varney's position. Private Reed Hammann, Eighth Precinct, heads the list for promotion to sergeant.

12 Past Heads Of Real Estate Board Honored

Certificates Presented By Fellow Members At Testimonial Affair

For their services to the Washington Real Estate Board 12 past presidents were honored with testimonial certificates by fellow members last night in the Mayflower Hotel.

Another testimonial plaque went to the family of the late William C. Miller, who was active not only in local real estate circles, but also served the National Association of Real Estate Boards as president E. L. Ostendorf, of Chicago, present president of the national organization, was here to award the Miller tribute.

The past presidents receiving certificates last night were John L. Weaver, also a past president of the national association; Lee D. Latimer, Harry K. Boss, Charles S. Shreve, Thomas E. Jarrell, Alfred H. Lawson, H. Clifford Bangs, A. C. Houghton, Harold E. Doyle, Francis A. Murray, F. Eliot Middleton and F. L. Sandoz.

Ostendorf said in an address the national association had been formed to raise standards of the real estate profession. Now he said the development of an effective education program within the organization was important. He said there is great need for research.

Arthur W. Binns, Philadelphia, chairman of the assocation's committee on housing, urged development of a "positive program" of housing in which real estate men, the traditional home builders, work toward their goal without tax exemptions and subsidies.

Herbert Nelson, executive vice president of the national association, spoke on the important part home ownership plays in our society.

Fred A. Smith, of the D. C. board, presided.

Carmody Calls Washington Slum Houses Appalling

A trip through Washington slum areas yesterday prompted Federal Works Administrator John Carmody to score local housing conditions as "appalling."

Carmody, whose agency has the slum reclamation and rehousing program among its responsibilities, said he went on the tour of 200 inhabited alleys in response to a request of John Ihlder, Alley Dwelling Authority chief.

Following the inspection, Carmody was shown new dwelling units built by the ADA.

His response to the "before" and "after" views was the assertion: "We went down alleys and through back streets and went into homes—no, I mean hovels and cabins—and saw the appalling places where so many people are living here." He added, "We have made some progress but there is a great deal yet to be done on Washington housing."

11 Injured In Accidents Due to Ice

Snow Expected Today in Wake Of Warm Wind; Cold to Return

With snow in the offing sometime today, Washington last night counted at least 11 injured as vestiges of the last snow were disappearing from its streets.

Of those injured yesterday, five were children hurt in coasting accidents, three were adults injured in falls on slippery pavements and steps and three were hurt by skidding automobiles. At least two of the injuries were considered serious.

To Be Warmer

Today's snow, the weatherman said, will arrive on the heels of warmer weather, which, in turn, will remain but briefly. Another cold snap, he indicated, is due tomorrow.

Children injured in coasting mishaps were:

William Norton, 15, of 509 East Capitol street, steered into a tree when he was coasting last night on Capitol Hill. He was treated at Providence Hospital for a severe scalp laceration.

Reese Bright, 12, of Hyattsville, Md., was in serious condition at Casualty Hospital after sliding into a bus on Franklin street in Hyattsville. He suffered a fractured right arm, severe lacerations of the face and a possible fracture.

Charles Rhone, 11, of 1650 Fuller street northwest, received a head injury when he coasted into a tree at Seventeenth and Fuller streets. He was admitted to Children's Hospital after treatment at Garfield.

Delmas Walls, 12, of 408 New York avenue northwest, struck a bus in the 1100 block of Fourth street northwest. He was treated at Sibley Hospital for leg injuries.

Leon Miskin, 11, of 4010 Marlboro place northwest, coasted into an automobile at Eighth and Shepherd streets northwest. He went to Children's after treatment at Garfield for head injuries.

Falls Injure Many

Pedestrians who slipped on ice were:

Ella Meyer, 51, of 933 L street northwest, fell on Eleventh street between F and G streets northwest. She was treated at Emergency Hospital for a sprained right ankle.

Christine Davis, 28, of 225 H street northwest, suffered a fractured right ankle when she slipped on the steps of her home. She was taken to Emergency.

Ida May Janes, colored, 29, of 500 Virginia avenue southeast, slipped on the street at Fourth and Virginia avenue southeast. She was treated at Providence for severe lacerations of the face and a possible nose fracture.

Injured in automobile crashes were:

Judson B. O'Bannon, 49, of 325 E street northeast, and Stephen J. Devine, 26, of 1842 North Capitol street, who were riding in a Health Department truck which collided with an automobile at Minnesota avenue and Bennings road northeast. Both were taken to Emergency, where O'Bannon was found to have severe scalp lacerations and Devine several fractured ribs, a fractured pelvis and probable internal injuries. Devine's condition was said to be serious.

William Randall, 24, of 414 Adams street northwest, was injured when he was struck by the rear of a truck which skidded in the 1400 block of K street northwest. The truck did not stop. Randall was treated at Emergency Hospital for severe lacerations of the face and a possible fracture of the left leg.

Education Called Vital To Defense

Budgets Should Stay Intact if Conflict Comes, Says Dr. Reeves

Education in the event of war should be contined at the full peacetime level to assure the internal strength of American democracy, Dr. Floyd W. Reeves, director of the American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education, declared last night.

"Slashing of educational budgets should not take place in time of war," he told more than 100 persons at the Y. M. C. A., 1736 G street northwest, in the first of the winter series of forum lectures.

"National defense depends not alone upon armaments," he continued, "but upon the basic character and the vocational self-sufficiency of our people."

Dr. Reeves pointed out that "what the youth of America does is of extreme importance to us, but we must give them a democracy that works."

Estimating there are approximately 4,000,000 unemployed between the ages of 16 and 24 years, he declared the total rose at the rate of 500,000 persons a year.

Three problems, "jobs, health and education," confront the United States so far as youth is concerned, he said.

Asserting the "European war will not solve the unemployment problem here this year," Dr. Reeves advocated giving "youth the opportunity to make things the group needs."

Aiding youth to make economic adjustment after completing school, he stated, has always been the province of the Federal Government.

During most of America's history, he explained, land was provided for young people seeking to found homes.

Since American farm lands already are full, Dr. Reeves declared, the Federal Government should assist States and local communities in training young people for jobs open to them.

Panel members for discussion following Dr. Reeves' address were Dr. Mitchell Drees, professor of psychology and dean of Summer School, George Washington University; Mrs. Clara Beyer, chairman of the Federal Committee on Apprenticeship Training, Labor Department; Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent of District schools; Dr. Weston Clark, president of the District Guidance and Personnel Association, and Miss Elizabeth Wickenden, assistant to the National Youth administrator.

American U. Group Again Asks School

Citizens Association President Favors Leaving Federation Unless It Aids Plea

The American University Park Citizens Association last night renewed demands for an elementary school in that section as President James E. Maxwell scored the Federation of Citizens Associations for its failure to support the year-old proposal.

Maxwell declared that unless he was able "to convince the federation it should support the association" he would favor his organization's withdrawal from the group.

Although the American University group presented the proposal for the school in February of 1939, it was not until last week that the federation acted on it, Maxwell said. The federation referred the matter back to the Board of Education, he said.

The unit has long urged establishment of a primary school in the area. Seventy-seven per cent of the population, occupants of 1,135 homes, favored the proposed school in a recent poll, Maxwell declared. At present, more than 500 children from the section are forced to attend the overcrowded Janney School, several miles away.

In other business, members urged a speed-up in the bus schedule in the area, partcularly at mid-day. The association asked attendance of a Capital Transit Co. official at a future meeting.

Congress Heights

Special areas in Washington Civil War forts and school playgrounds for sleigh riding were urged last night by Congress Heights Citizens Association.

The unit voted to present the proposal to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Recreation Department.

Members pointed out that Forts Dupont, Davis, Carroll and Stanton as well as the Camp Simms area all have suitable hills.

They asked portable inclines in school playgrounds for younger children.

At present the Police Department is unable to detail sufficient patrolmen to rope off more than one or two hills in a section the size of Congress Heights, it was said.

Members voted a survey of transportation needs in the section, particularly on Alabama avenue. Buses now do not operate beyond Fifth street on the thoroughfare. A bus loop north on Alabama avenue to Eleventh street, then south to Savannah street, west to Wheeler road, and north to Alabama avenue was urged to serve school children and shoppers.

Other resolutions approved the Fire Survey Board report favoring abolition of overlapping fire precincts and obsolete fire houses, and opposed the Randolph bill for a 1-cent increase in the gasoline tax.

Nation's Picture Critics Name Year's 'Ten Best'

542 Professional Filmgoers Cast Record Vote; Luise Rainer Is Brief Capital Visitor; This, That and the Other About the Theater

BELL

1. GOODBYE, MR. CHIPS.
2. MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON.
3. PYGMALION.
4. WUTHERING HEIGHTS.
5. DARK VICTORY.
6. THE WOMEN.
7. THE WIZARD OF OZ.
8. JUAREZ.
9. STANLEY AND LIVINGSTONE.
10. THE OLD MAID.

Not only is "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" the first foreign-made picture ever to win this coveted distinction, but it won by the highest vote ever recorded in this particular balloting. With a total of 472 votes out of a possible 542, it led its closest competitor by a margin of almost 40—"Mr. Smith" garnered 433—and considerably exceeded the previous high vote of 453 scored by "The Life of Emile Zola" in 1937.

It is further significant that only one musical subject, "The Wizard of Oz," made the first ten, and even that one was only incidentally musical.

Breaking the list down into terms of producing companies, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer once again emerges with four winners in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," "Pygmalion," "The Women" and "The Wizard of Oz." The Warner Brothers are next with three—"Dark Victory," "Juarez" and "The Old Maid," in all of which Bette Davis was cast in the stellar feminine role. The remaining three are divided, one each, among Columbia, with "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington;" United Artists (Samuel Goldwyn), with "Wuthering Heights," and Twentieth Century-Fox, with "Stanley and Livingstone."

To facilitate the aim of those wishing to throw brickbats and to keep the record straight, it may be permissible to recall that in this space on Wednesday, December 27, we nominated the following as our selection of the "Ten Best:"

1. GOODBYE, MR. CHIPS.
2. WUTHERING HEIGHTS.
3. THE OLD MAID.
4. PYGMALION.
5. STAGECOACH.
6. LOVE AFFAIR.
7. THE WIZARD OF OZ.
8. JUAREZ.
9. STANLEY AND LIVINGSTONE.
10. BABES IN ARMS.

We have no apologies to make. We conceded that "Mr. Smith" would rank near the top on every list but our own, and for specific reasons. "Stagecoach" finished No. 11 on the final count, "Babes in Arms" was No. 13 and "Love Affair" No. 14. The "Honor Roll" runs on to a total number of 49 entries. Perhaps that is coming close enough, but we still feel that certain aspects of story, acting and production were slighted by many of our confreres in forming their estimates of all-around worth.

And they think the same about me!

And still distinguished stars of the stage and screen continue to "drop in" on Washington. Luise Rainer, twice winner of the Academy Award as the best screen actress for the given year—once for her impersonation of Anna Held in "The Great Ziegfeld" and again for her O-Lan in "The Good Earth"—is the latest star to slip unobtrusively into the Capital in a purely nonprofessional capacity. She is the house guest of Mrs. James H. Whyte and this afternoon will be Mrs. Whyte's guest of honor at a cocktail party to which the drama desks graciously have been bidden.

Theatergoers should be distinctly Stephen C. Foster conscious next week. With the Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor production of "Swanee River," based on the life of the great composer of American folk songs, opening on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater today, it is interesting that "The Travellers," a group of young Washington actors and musicians, will present Earl Hobson Smith's "Stephen Foster" at the Lyric Theater, in Gaithersburg, Md., on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, January 16-18, inclusive. This play also is based on the life of Stephen Collins Foster and is interspersed with the most popular of the Foster compositions.

"The Travellers'" production will supplant the feature picture usually shown at the Lyric and will occupy the stage from 8 to 10:30 p. m., with short screen features to follow. Popular prices will prevail. "Stephen Foster" was recently presented in Washington by practically the same cast and was enthusiastically received. It is the tentative plan to present it here again in Roosevelt Auditorium, at a later date, to be announced.

And as long as we are on the topic of Stephen C. Foster, there will be still more of his music on tap next week. Sam Jack Kaufman, that tall, personable and versatile musical Lochinvar, is riding out of the West again and will return to Loew's Capitol Theater today as guest conductor. His overture number will be a medley of Foster melodies in further tribute to the memory of the man whose picturized life will be opening simultaneously on the screen at the Palace.

"Miss Lollypop's Party," an unusual entertainment written especially for children from 6 to 60, will be presented tonight at 8:15 in the new playhouse of the Women's Club of Chevy Chase, Md., just across the roadway from the Columbia Country Club. This is the first essay at playwriting by Mrs. Leona Patterson Tiller, whose son, Ted Tiller II, already enjoys a considerable reputation as a successful playwright and actor. Mrs. Tiller's fanciful piece will be presented by young players trained in Mrs. Rose Robison Cohen's Children's Studio of the Drama. The playlet has its locale in a candy shop—any candy shop—where Miss Lollypop gives a party and invites as her guests all the other candies. Mr. Bitter Chocolate is the villain of the play. The Tiller penchant for this sort of whimsical thing promises unique diversion.

The newly organized Community Center and Playhouse Department, under the joint control of the District Board of Education and the D. C. Commissioners, has announced its desire to assist the amateur drama groups of the National Capital in promoting a continuance this year of their One-Act Play Tournament, inaugurated in 1927. Sixteen acting groups, indicated their interest at a preliminary meeting held on January 4. On Thursday, January 18, there will be another meeting of representatives of the drama groups in the Force Building, 1740 Massachusetts avenue northwest at 5 o'clock. All participating organizations are urged to send representatives to serve on the executive committee in formulating rules and regulations, determining dates, awards and other business matters.

When Mary Brian, one-third of the title of "Three After Three," currently at the National, dropped by yesterday afternoon for a friendly visit, she revealed much that is going on in the matter of whipping this gay musical piece into final form. New musical numbers and dances still are being worked into the nine scenes of the two acts; rehearsals go on almost continuously; Jack Whiting, the newcomer to the cast this week, eventually will have a tricky dance with each of the feminine titular principals—Mary, Mitzi Green and Simone Simon; Mary's present dance with the four boys in the second act will soon be supplanted by a more intricate routine now "in work"; no two performances have been alike since the piece opened in Boston; from here "Three After Three" goes to Pittsburgh, then to Toronto, then Detroit and Chicago and, after that, probably straight into New York.

It is a pretty elegant little show now. It should be a star-spangled wow by the time Broadway sees it.

Not content with one afternoon at the Capitol, Mary had been back there again yesterday, hobnobbing with more Senators and high Government functionaries and practically stopping all legislative activity on the Hill for the duration of her second visit. Mary is like that. No wheels turned on the third floor here, either, while she was in the building—which wasn't half long enough!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 11.

For years producers, writers, actors, musicians, scenic artists, social leaders and pseudo-sophisticates have yapped and yapped about the crying need for a Hollywood Community Theater. But nothing concrete actually happened until about a year ago when a score of people, with nothing in their pockets, but a great idea in their heads got together and with a spirit like the old Christian martyrs said, "By golly, we'll do it!" They knit together an organization known as "The Hollywood Theater Alliance." Cornered Jay Gorney, who wrote "Brother Can You Spare a Dime;" Henry Myers, who did the script on "Destry Rides Again;" Danny Dare, the Broadway revue director; Leon Belasco, who was making $1,500 a week with his own society band in New York when he ran into Mervyn Le Roy and Mervyn said, "You're wasting your time—you ought to be an actor." Leo gave up his band and came to Hollywood. And that's about as far as Mervyn Le Roy went. Well, they got to work and wrote a revue called "Meet the People." And now all of Hollywood is fighting to get into a theater which seats only 400.

HOPPER

Charlie Chaplin has seen it four times; Louis B. Mayer twice, and the only man in Hollywood who dared turn down Hedy LaMarr was the box office treasurer. There were no more seats available! The other night every one from Jimmy Roosevelt, Jimmy Stewart, Greer Garson and Winnie Sheehan stood up and cheered when the performance ended with Barney Phillips leading the cast in a dynamite-dipped dirge called "The Bill of Rights." It makes you want to stand up and cheer in gratitude for being an American. It's Barney' first musical incidentally—he's a former Shakespearean actor. In short, "Meet the People" is a wow in spite of Hollywood and not because of it!

After fighting the flu by day and going to Good Samaritan Hospital by night while he was working on "We Shall Meet Again," Director Eddie Goulding finally gave over to William Keighley, who did such a swell job with "The Fighting 69th" . . . After seeing Diana Lewis testing in a seduction scene for "40 Little Mothers," I don't wonder Bill Powell made her Mrs. Powell—she's terrific. Incidentally, it was Tommy Neal, not Don Barry, who was her boy friend four weeks ago.

Hear that when Harmon Nelson had the flu recently, he got flowers daily from Bette Davis. . . . Bobby Breen and a schoolmate named Mariam Butler are enjoying puppy love. Looks like his voice isn't the only thing that's changing! I like Arthur Murray's philosophy: "War determines not who is right but who is left! . . . Speaking of Murray, he and Groucho Marx were talking about a certain producer's young son being sent to military school and how it affected the youngster. When he returned between semesters, he opened the door and the visitor asked if Mr. So-and-so was in. "I'm Mr. So-and-so," the very erect lad replied, politely but firmly, "or did you wish to see Old Man So-and-so?"

"Remember the Night," Mitch Leisen's picture, starring Barbara Stanwyck and Fred MacMurray, is one you'll remember for a long time. There's not a false note in it, nor a bad performance. I saw it at a private projection room in Carmel Myers' house before an audience consisting of the Charles Boyers, Tyrone Powers, Dick Powells, Jack Bennys, Leisens, A. C. Blumenthals, Joe Pasternak, and there wasn't a dry eye in the lot including Bob Taylor's. At that same party Joe Pasternak told us he was going to do "Seven Sinners" with Marlene Dietrich—a sinner from each sea. Oh! a beachcomber picture, huh! He asked Annabella to give him a name for his leading character. Annabella said, "Why must bad women always be French in pictures?" And then went on, "To me, Manon is the most beautiful name in our language."

"Yes, it's true that Jack Benny gave Barbara Stanwyck a sable coat because she wouldn't take money for going on his air show. Then Mary wouldn't let her wear it to show us—because it was raining. And I'd like to say right here—that was an evening of camaraderie. No gossip — no jealousies—and might have been held in any small town in the country instead of with the biggest stars in the industry.

I've a letter from the Seeing Eye Dog Foundation asking to pass along their thanks to Lupe Velez for taking that blind man in tow recently, introducing him around the RKO set and raising enough to buy a seeing eye dog for him. The blind man, Raymond King, is in New Jersey getting acquainted with his four-legged friend and being trained to rely upon him. When he returns to Hollywood Lupe will get him a job here . . .

The New Yorker

New York, Jan. 11.

SAM GOLDWYN attended the performance of "Life With Father." Howard Lindsay knew he was present, and, mindful of the movie sale, spoke his lines with the sudden realization that many portions of this great American play were unsuitable for the screen . . . The censors wouldn't permit the "Oh, God" Father screams nor would they approve of a minister being made the butt of jokes. And as for the central theme—baptism—well, Lindsay was worried . . . But Sam Goldwyn, butt of countless movie jokes, came backstage later and, except for calling it "How to Live With Father," showed them exactly how he'd change the story to make it a perfect movie vehicle.

THE "A. H." who has been contributing poems to the morning newspapers is the 92-year-old August Heckscher . . . Poultney Bigelow, the octogenarian who has visited Holland each year to spend the birthday with Kaiser Wilhelm, is cussing the State Department for refusing to give him a passport this year. "The dictators in Washington," he laments, "won't let me go to Doorn" . . . Herbert Hoover's committee plans to have a Finnish Relief Day in every school room in America, asking every student to contribute one penny for each member of the family. In that way Hoover expects to raise $500,000. Jean Giono, author of the prize-winning movie, "Harvest," was just released by the French, who had imprisoned him as "a defeatist propagandist."

PHIL SILVERS, who was a young burlesque comic until Lew Brown signed him for his first Broadway show, "Yokel Boy," yesterday signed a one-year contract with MGM . . . Silvers told the news to his friends in Lindy's last night . . . "Happy, aren't you?" said Benny Baker, who just completed a term at Paramount. "Well, I spent three years there" . . . "So what?" asked Silvers . . . "So this," replied Baker, pulled out his wallet and opened it . . . It was empty.

DESPITE ALL the publicity, American Airlines, in its circulars, still refers to La Guardia Field as "Municipal Airport" . . . Meyer Levin, who had some disputes with the editors of Esquire, is being punished by having to write his film reviews under the name of "Patterson Murphy" . . . Damon Runyon's Broadway tales will be adapted to radio serialization, with Lionel Stander starring . . . Private polls of the drama critics indicate that their award will go to William Saroyan's "Time of Your Life" . . . Tommy Manville is backing Dave of Dave's Blue Room.

CHARLES LAUGHTON, who will make a personal-appearance tour, in each theater will recite the Gettysburg Address . . . When he recited that speech at the Radio City Music Hall—at the premiere of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame"—Laughton told one of the Music Hall officials: "This is an awfully large theater, awfully large" . . . "Don't worry," he was assured. "The picture will pack 'em in" . . . "Oh, I didn't mean that," said Laughton. "I mean, in my speech—was every consonant clear?"

THE EDITORS of Life magazine were offered a censorable photo of Eileen Herrick—and bought it just to take it out of circulation. . . . Jim Kieran, who resigned as the mayor's secretary, still is on the municipal pay roll . . . Dr. Charles Browne of Princeton is tendering a smoked turkey feast tonight for the A. R. A.—the Anonymous Reunion Association, composed of grads whose classes don't hold specific reunions . . . Orson Welles now has another private office —above Chasen's Restaurant in Hollywood . . . The World's Fair President's Room at the Empire State Building is being refurbished, because the directors refuse to attend meetings at the Fair grounds, where it's too cold.

LEIF ERICKSON of "Margin for Error" broadcast on the Kate Smith show Friday night . . . Then he went to the theater, where in one scene where Hitler's broadcast is heard Erickson is supposed to speak words which aren't heard by the audience because of Hitler's loud voice . . . The words he's been saying are: "See that audience out there? They're going to take you and Horst and that guy speaking and throw all of you into the East River" . . . Friday night the Hitler voice record suddenly was stilled and the audience heard Erickson say: "—and they're going to put you all on the Kate Smith show."

War in China Did Mr. Lorre Real Service

Killed Off 'Moto' And Freed Actor; Hawthorne Revised

By Frederick C. Othman.
United Press Hollywood Correspondent.

Hollywood, Jan. 11.—When the Japanese started dropping bombs on China the only man in this hemisphere who profited, so far as we know, was Peter Lorre, actor.

He was under contract to Twentieth Century-Fox, playing the wily Japanese detective, Mr. Moto, in a series of movies similar to those featuring Charlie Chan. The studio figured that if a Chinese detective could capture the affections of the movie fans, a Japanese Hawkshaw should do the same.

Lorre hated Mr. Moto's pseudo-Oriental wisecracks, his hissings, and his heel-clickings. Only there wasn't anything he could do about it. Then—boom! bombs exploded over Shanghai.

Lorre kept on making Motos, the Japanese continued bombing China—and first thing Twentieth Century-Fox knew, nobody was going to see its detective entertainments. It got so finally that the cash customers would hiss Mr. Moto whenever he appeared on the screen. The studio chieftains eliminated Lorre from their schedules and left him free to be an actor again.

Mr. Moto's Happy Demise

"So despite my sympathies for the Chinese," he reported today, "I could not help but be happy when the Japanese declared their undeclared war. They killed Mr. Moto."

Lorre currently is appearing in "I Was an Adventuress," a big-time production, featuring himself, Zorina, Richard Greene, and Erich von Stroheim, and for the first time in his Hollywood career, Lorre is playing a comedy part.

He used to be a comedian on the European stage. He was a good one, too. And then a German movie company retained him to play in "M," the horror picture, in which he starred as a pathological murderer. He made such an impression in it, that mothers actually fled with their children when he appeared in public. So "M" ended Lorre's career as a comic. In Hollywood he continued to be either the villain, or the detective, who never cracked a smile.

"But I kept working on them," he reported, "and they finally let me try comedy again. It took eight years for me to put the idea across."

We hasten to report the latest enterprise of Universal Studios, which now is making into a movie for the first time Nathaniel Hawthorne's classic novel, "The House of Seven Gables."

House Will Be Realistic!

You remember it. You read it in high school. You had to. It was on the required reading list. It was about the elderly spinster and her graying brother, who lived in the house with the seven gables. And it was perhaps the dullest, driest, most uninspiring book on the English teacher's shelf.

You can't get much excitement into a brother's high regard for his sister, so Universal turned its principals into cousins. That provided the romance.

Only there can't be much sex appeal in the courtship of two old folks, no matter how noble, so Universal younged them up.

It made Miss Margaret Lindsay the heroine, Mr. Vincent Price the hero. And that brings us to the final flip of this little story:

After doing mayhem and worse to Hawthorne's novel, and changing it around so that he probably is turning over in his grave this minute, Universal suffered qualms of conscience. Maybe it ought to try to get a little reality into its picture.

Jack Otterson, the art director, returned yesterday from Salem, Mass., with phoographs, drawings and measurements of the original house with the seven gables. It will be reproduced faithfully in the film.

Boy!

'Scarlett O'Hara' In British Movie

Two years ago—and before the first of them was even ready for production—Paramount contracted for the American release of three Charles Laughton starring pictures, to be made in England—"The Beachcomber," "Jamaica Inn" and "The Sidewalks of London."

"The Beachcomber" cleaned up. "Jamaica Inn" is doing very nicely today, thanks to you. But "The Sidewalks of London," soon ready for release, has turned out to be a golden windfall, because it will cash in on the terrifying publicity campaign given Vivien ("Scarlett O'Hara") Leigh since the British picture, in which she co-stars with Charles Laughton, was completed.

Linda Rand Vetera At Age of 9 Months

Linda Rand, at the tender age of nine months, already looks upon her profession as a screen actress with the blase eyes of a veteran.

With her current role in "Emergency Squad," melodrama of the police-fire department "suicide" units, she has played in three different films, starting when she was only seven months old.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Chicago, Jan. 11 (INS).—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was busier than a three-ring circus today switching horses in midstream. First came the news that Greer Garson goes into "Pride and Prejudice" instead of Norma Shearer. And right on the heels of this, Joan Crawford telephoned on her way through Chicago, en route to Hollywood, to tell me that she will do "Susan and God," which was ready and supposedly set for Miss Garson. To add to the complications, Norma Shearer is on her way to New York to see Sidney Kingsley's "The World We Make," which she makes next in place of "Pride and Prejudice."

LOUELLA PARSONS

Understand the reasons for the change in casting plans are very simple: Hunt Stromberg, who will produce both "Pride and Prejudice" and "Susan and God," has both pictures ready to start. It was decided some time ago between Hunt and Norma that "Pride and Prejudice" was a better picture for Miss Garson than it was for Norma. Rather than postpone it until she finishes "Susan and God," the plan now is to make both pictures at the same time. If you ask me—everybody should be happy, since Joan Crawford seems a much better choice for "Susan and God" than Miss Garson.

Our Susan Hayward will no more than get her bags unpacked when the troupe arrives home Sunday than she's due to report to Paramount for the chief femme role in "Mystery Ship." Ray Milland will be the hero in this Robert Grant story—but before I tell you more about the yarn I want to say that Susie deserves this break. She has made so many fans across the country, not only because she is clever, but also because she has a grand sense of humor and was always swell to the autograph brigade. "Mystery Ship" deals with the current headline stories about sea raiders disguised as merchant ships and will be produced by Eugene Zukor, with Akim Tamiroff, Lynn Overman and J. Carroll Naish also in the cast.

The ultra-swank social event in Hollywood Monday will be the milk cocktail spree Elsa Maxwell is tossing in honor of 19-months-old Peter B. Good, at the Roosevelt Hotel. Elsa has sent out nursery invitations to the children of the stars and the Hollywood press folk that should spoil them for juvenile doings from now on. Prospective guests have been informed "no adults will be allowed unless accompanied by children." An honest-to-goodness grown-up doorman will be on hand to page "Mr. Peter B. Good's kiddie car" after the festivities and I do hear that Master Good is wearing "formal" diapers to the event.

Snapshots of Chicago and Hollywood collected at random: Had luncheon with Townsend Netcher at the very attractive pump room at the Ambassador Hotel. Saw Marge Crane, Albert Lacker's daughter, and Gertrude Netcher, who leaves for the coast Friday. Later went to call on T. in his office at the Boston store; Alice Faye passed through town today and her fan club was on hand to greet her; the Colony Club entertained our troupe and Marcel Lamaze came through with some of his famous cuisine. Frank Faye put on a floor show that was a riot. He introduced all the company and has never been as funny . . . he hasn't had a drink in months; Mecca Graham and I went to supper with Clifton Webb and his mother; Susan Kaaren and Sidney Blackmer all made up and happy again, dining at Sardi's; Bette Davis has moved into her new house in the Los Feliz district.

Isabel Jewell and her boy friend, Paul Ferraro, at the Club 17; after eight weeks on tour I've come to the conclusion that Jimmy Stewart is the most popular person in the world. I can't even mention his name from the stage that audiences don't break into applause; Clara Bow has checked out of the Mayo clinic, but will rest a week before heading home; the Three Stooges leave Hollywood Monday to open in Chicago on the 19th with Gloria Dickson, Cliff Edwards, the Brewster Twins, Alex d'Arcy, Linda Ware and Marjorie Bell in their troupe. Edgar Allan Woolf, who wrote our act, also scripted for this one; Dick Purcell and Eddie Norris showing the sights of Hollywood to Virginia Garner, niece of Vice President John Garner.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Friends Reunited After Two Decades

Two friends who have been separated for 20 years were re-united for the first time on the "Geronimo!" set.

They are Andy Devine, who portrays Sneezer, the scout, and Chief Thunder Cloud, full-blooded Cheyenne Indian, who is enacting the role of the vicious Geronimo, avenger of the white man's wrong to the redskin late in the nineteenth century.

When the two were boys they played together in Flagstaff, Ariz., birthplace of Devine.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
...as American as apple pie!
THE HARDY FAMILY, the whole kit and kaboodle of them, have moved in next door to practically everybody in this country—and established themselves in our hearts as the most human, pesky, yet altogether pleasant pack of neighbors anybody ever had.
Ever since Mickey Rooney first went to Lewis Stone for a little confidential, man to man advice...ever since Fay Holden first tried to plaster Mickey's cowlick down, or take some of the shine off his blue serge suit...we've all had a swell time peeking at our new neighbors, the Hardys, through the window-shades, spying out what they're having for dinner, who they're going out with, eavesdropping on their family quarrels and poking our noses into their business in the good old gossipy American way. Too bad Mark Twain never lived to see an Andy Hardy picture.
You can't help liking a real human kid who takes to "swing" as naturally and honestly as he takes to the measles ...and pulls through both with no ill effects. You can't help liking a family that meets each new crisis with fortitude and real down-to-earth humor...whether it's a new girl-friend for Andy, a new dilemma for the Judge or just another squabble about who'll do the dishes.
There's something solid about the Hardy family. "Judge Hardy & Son" is their newest and best adventure. It's mighty well worth seeing! Watch for it at your favorite theatre!

'Goat' Lombardi Refuses Cut of $6,000

Ex-Chicago Mentor Given 5-Year Pact

47-Year-Old Coach Succeeds Thornhill At Palo Alto School; No Terms Mentioned

By the Associated Press

Palo Alto, Calif., Jan. 11.—Clark D. Shaughnessy, 47, University of Chicago "coach without a team," inherited the remnants of a last-place Pacific Coast Conference squad today through his appointment as football director at Stanford University.

President Ray Lyman Wilbur, of Stanford, said the Chicago mentor had been appointed for five years, but made no mention of the salary. Shaughnessy, with a ranking of professor in addition to head football coach at Chicago, was believed to have received $7,500 a year.

Trustees at Chicago decided last month to abolish football after a disastrous season. Shaughnessy succeeds Claude (Tiny) Thornhill, dismissed at the close of the Indians' most disappointing season in the university's gridiron history.

Stanford failed to record a conference victory last year, losing six league encounters and gaining a tie with U. C. L. A.. In a postseason game they defeated Dartmouth.

Earlier this week Thornhill said he wished good luck for his then unnamed successor and expressed hope the new coach would have the cooperation Thornhill said he had "not enjoyed for several years."

Explaining his refusal to resign, Thornhill said "it was not the mistaken idea of trying to save my job, but to give the university a chance to clean up some bad politics, both on the inside and out. This done, I intended to resign."

Shaughnessy was recommended for the position by the university's board of athletic control. The names of many well known football coaches were considered, but only one ballot was taken by board members and it was unanimous for Shaughnessy.

Shaughnessy Out To Prove His Abliity

Red Catcher Irate Over 1940 Offer

Player Blames Hitting Rather Than Famed Boner at Plate in Battle With Yanks

By the Associated Press

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 11.—Ernie Lombardi, whose "snooze" at home plate in the final game of the 1939 World's Series gained him national fame, is on a "sit-down strike" of his own creation today.

The big Cincinnati Reds catcher, snorting in disgust, returned unsigned a baseball contract which called for a salary cut of $6,000. He reportedly received $20,000 last season.

Asked if he thought the unfortunate play had anything to do with the pay slice, Lombardi said: "I don't think so. No one on our club ever said anything to me about it. Our manager, Bill McKechnie, never opened his mouth. I guess they're cutting me because I didn't hit so well.

"I led the league in hitting in 1938 and they raised my pay $6,000. Now because I only hit .287, they are taking the $6,000 away from me. I caught in around 130 games and hustled hard all year. We won the pennant and got in the World Series. The club made a lot of money and still they want me to take less."

Lombardi, explaining the much discussed play at the plate in which Yankee Charley Keller collided with him and Joe DiMaggio scored from second, said he did not know what was taking place.

"I was just out," he said. "Keller hit me hard. One leg struck me on the wrist and seemed to paralyze me. The other leg struck me in the chest. I was out on the ground and didn't know who was scoring. Until I got to my feet I didn't know just what had happened."

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Ernie Lombardi, who watched the runs go by last October in the final World Series game, has finally roused himself to action. But he isn't mad at the Yankees. He's fuming at the Cincinnati Reds' front office. It seems they are asking him to take a $6,000 salary cut.

POVICH

Ernie says he won't sign for a measly $14,000 wage. That statement is interesting chiefly because of the revelation that the Reds were paying Lombardi $20,000 last season. Apparently the Reds do not deal in tin. No matter what may be said about the caliber of National League baseball as compared to the American League's, there can be no complaint with the N. L. salary scale if Lombardi's twenty G's of 1939 are any criterion.

Sure enough, Lombardi led the league's hitters in 1938 but bereft of his bat big Ernie never struck this department as even a passably good ball player. He catches with all the grace of a hippo and on the bases he resembles nothing so much as a rheumatic snal. He had to lead the league in hitting to promote himself to $20,000.

Lombardi's .287 No Great Asset

If Lombardi is the least bit perplexed as to why the Reds saw fit to serve him a $6,000 salary slash, any semidevout follower of baseball can easily enlighten him. Firstly, Lombardi not only failed to lead the league in hitting again last season. In fact, big Ernie did not even hit .300, but slumped to a very modest .287. And as a .287 hitter, Lombardi is something less than a ball of fire in the big leagues.

Secondly, Lombardi could be reminded that he didn't exactly do the Reds any favor in that final game of the 1939 World Series when, with the score tied in the last inning, he forgot to pick up the ball and tag a couple of Yankees who were crossing the plate with the winning runs. No, indeedy, the Reds could hardly be expected to applaud that act.

Roughly, Lombardi that afternoon cost the Reds' front office about $75,000. That is the figure that would have gone into the club treasury if big Ernie's lapses had not occurred and the Reds had won that fourth game, thus sending the series into at least one more game.

There may be merit to Lombardi's alibi that he was knocked out on the much-discussed play when Charley Keller collided with him at the plate, thus paving the way for DiMaggio to sneak home almost unmolested. But it is strange that Manager Bill McKechnie thus far has offered no evidence to support Lombardi's claims.

McKechnie Defended Myers

It may be pertinent to recall that whereas McKechnie did not come to the defense of Lombardi, he did feel the urge to remove the stigma from a grievous error by Shortstop Billy Myers which had as much to do with losing the game as did Lombardi's snooze at the plate.

Myers, you remember, missed a chance to retire the Yankees on a double-play in the ninth inning and thus preserve for the Reds their slender lead. We forget who hit the ball to Second Baseman Lonnie Frey but it appeared to be a perfect double-play grounder, which Frey tossed to Myers who was to relay the ball to first base.

You can imagine the horror in Cincinnati when Myers dropped Frey's throw and both runners were safe. To that point, the apparent goat of the series was Myers. And when the Yankees finally won the damage done by that dropped throw was irreparable. But McKechnie was not content to permit Myers to inherit the blame for the Reds' ninth-inning fiasco.

In his hotel that evening, McKechnie deliberately made it a point to absolve Myers. "You fellows can't blame him," said the Reds' manager to newspapermen. "I don't blame him. All season, Myers has been working with Frey as a double-play combination and doing a great job. But out there in the ninth-inning today, Frey crossed him up. For the first time this season, Frey flipped a double-play ball underhand to Myers. Poor Myers wasn't looking for that kind of a throw. I wasn't surprised when he muffed it."

Salaries Always Year in Arrears

But as we were pointing out, McKechnie, a generous sort of manager if there ever was one, has never felt impelled to absolve Lombardi for the big catcher's lapse in the tenth inning. And our feeling is that if Lombardi were not responsible for what happened, McKechnie would be the first to declare it.

Lombardi's salary battle with the Reds brings out, incidentally, another illustration of the vagaries of baseball salaries. In the big leagues at least, the rate of a ball player's salary is always one year in arrears. In 1939, for example, Lombardi was paid for what he accomplished in 1938. As the league's leading hitter, he received $20,000 . . . one year late. In other words, as a .287 hitter in 1939, he was getting more dough than in the year in which he led the league. If it's any news to Lombardi, he's getting paid this year for the work he did last year, which ought to explain his $6,000 cut.

Clemson Line Coach Gets Neely's Post

Frank Howard Picked To Succeed Head Pilot; Signs for Four Years

By the United Press

Clemson, S. C., Jan. 11.—Frank Howard, line coach at Clemson since 1931, tonight signed a four-year contract to be head football coach at the school, succeeding Jess Neely.

Neely yesterday became head coach at Rice.

Howard's promotion was announced by W. D. Barnett, of the Clemson board of trustees.

Howard was graduated from the University of Alabama in 1931 and went that fall to Clemson as line coach. He was a varsity football guard and also earned a letter in baseball at Alabama. He has been track as well as line football coach at Clemson.

Rangers Beat Hawks; Tie League Mark

New York Team Wins 18th Straight Game; Streak Started Nov. 19

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 11.—The New York Rangers tonight equaled the National Hockey League's 13-year-old record of 18 consecutive games without a defeat when they walloped the Chicago Black Hawks, 5 to 3, before about 13,000 fans.

The unbeaten streak started November 19 and is dotted with 5 ties. All told, the Rangers have won 14, lost 3 and tied 7.

Tonight's victory kept the Rangers in a first place tie with the Boston Bruins. Stanley Cup champions, who defeated Toronto, 5 to 2.

The record was set by the Montreal Canadiens. Toronto plays host to the Rangers Saturday.

Boston Bruins Trounce Toronto Leafs, 5-2

Toronto, Jan. 11 (AP).—Led by Herbie Cain, who scored four times, the Boston Bruins trounced the Toronto Leafs 5-2 tonight to remain in a tie for first place in the National Hockey League with the New York Rangers.

Cain's performances fell one short of the record of five goals for one game now held jointly by Charlie Conacher, New York Americans, and "Pit" Lepine, Canadians. Three of his goals came in the third period, two of them within 34 seconds of each other.

Sonja Henie Is Sued By Agent for $92,000

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 11.—A story that Sonja Henie had a brush with the 1936 winter Olympic officials over her since-abandoned amateurism and of hocus-pocus in the selection of judges of her skating was related in Supreme Court today.

Dennis R. Scanlon, an agent and promoter who says he acted both as defender of her amateurism and as a man who saw that her skating was judged in its true perfection, is suing her for $92,000.

Supreme Court Justice Louis A. Valente refused to dismiss the action brought by Scanlon, who contends that he succeeded in convincing Olympic officials at Garmisch-Partenkirchen that prior use of her name in advertising in Paris did not constitute professionalism. He convinced them, he said, that she did not know she had been advertised in Paris.

As for the judging business, Scanlon said he had an agreement with Miss Henie "to use his best efforts to cause to be named as judges . . . persons who were known to be not unfavorable to the defendant."

Counsel for Miss Henie sought dismissal on the ground that the alleged agreement was against public policy.

Scanlon said he met Miss Henie in London in 1935 and that he and a theatrical bureau contracted to share in 20 per cent of what she earned in the films.

"It's Ridiculous," Declares Miss Henie

Cleveland, Jan. 11 (AP).—Sonja Henie, figure skating star, termed ridiculous tonight an assertion made in New York Supreme Court by Dennis R. Scanlon, promoter and agent, that he saw to it judges favorable to her were appointed for the 1936 Olympic championships.

"It's the most ridiculous thing I ever heard," declared Miss Henie, who is appearing in an ice show here.

"As a matter of fact I skated in the 1936 Olympics without even a single Norwegian judge, although there were judges from almost every other country in the event.

"Scanlon is going to be in for a lot of trouble, because I'm going to New York next week to testify, and tell plenty.

"I should think those (skating) judges would get awful mad, because what he says reflects on them as well as on me," she continued.

"It's ridiculous for him to say I owe him $92,000 because I have a receipt in full from him. He was just hanging around the Olympic games in Berlin when I first met him and I helped him out by giving him a job.

"I'm not worried, because this is just another suit," she laughed. "I was sued for a million once, and didn't worry."

Kid Cocoa Decisions Holman Williams

Baltimore, Jan. 11 (AP).—Louis Kid Cocoa left-jabbed his way to a 15-round decision tonight over Holman Williams but was hanging on the ropes in the final round.

Seconded by Joe Louis, heavyweight champion, Williams opened his attack in the tenth round when Cocoa seemed to tire.

Funds for Grain To Feed Starving Wild Birds Sought

The District chapter of the Izaak Walton League continued its drive for grain to feed thousands of wild birds starving because of the snow that has covered the ground since December 27.

Although the snow has been removed from many of the city streets and walks, the remnants of the two falls still cover the ground in the suburbs and the birds are unable to find food. Particularly along the streams and in the woods the birds are found starved.

The Post sports department received several contributions yesterday and will accept funds in care of the Bird Feeding Fund, Washington Post Sports Department, Washington, D. C.

Delaware Distributes Food for Birds

Wilmington, Del., Jan. 11 (AP).—Delaware's fish and game commission announced today it would distribute 800 pounds of food for starving birds in upper New Castle County. Recent snow and ice has made it difficult for the birds to obtain food.

By the United Press

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 11.—Craig Wood, veteran pro from Mamaroneck, N. Y., and Wilford Wehrle, Chicago amateur, today paddled around the soggy course of the Sequoyah Country Club with par-busting 67s in the first round of the $5,000 Oakland open golf tournament.

Behind the pacemakers were Jim Demaret, Houston, Tex., and Clayton Haefner, Linville, N. C., with 68s.

In the 69 bracket were Lawson Little, Bretton Wood, N. H., winner of last week's Los Angeles Open; Bill Williamson, Hollywood; Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J.; Fred Wetmore, San Francisco; Bruce Coltart, Haddonfield, N. H.; Ed Oliver, Hornell, N. Y.; Ben Hogan, White Plains, N. Y.; Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill., and Ben Coltrin, San Francisco.

Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam Club professional from Washington, D. C., was off to his best round on the winter tour as he played the first nine in 36, 1 over par, but the lanky Mid-Atlantic Open champion slipped to 41 on the return trip for a 77.

Rut Coffey, Winchester, Va., professional, was within striking distance with a 73, three over par, from an out nine of 37 and back nine of 36. Par for the course is 35-35, 70.

Texas Aggies Star to Attend Grid Dinner

Kimbrough Accepts Touchdown Club Bid; To Get Special Trophy

Jarrin' John Kimbrough, the Texas Aggies' great fullback, yesterday accepted an invitation to attend the Touchdown Club's fourth annual banquet at the Willard Hotel Tuesday night.

Dr. T. O. Walton, president of Texas A. and M., informed Touchdown officials that Kimbrough will be excused from his classes for the trip. Virtually an unanimous choice for All-America honors, Kimbrough will be awarded a special trophy by the club.

Jesse Jones, Federal Loan administrator, and a fellow Texan, will make the presentation. A large party of Texans, headed by Senator Tom Connally and Sam Rayburn, majority leader of the House of Representatives, will welcome the Aggies' football star of the 14-13 triumph over Tulane in the Sugar Bowl game to Washington.

A 40-minute news reel digest of the highlights of the 1939 football season will be shown at the banquet, which will be attended by more than 250 persons.

The list of celebrities will be headlined by Postmaster General James A. Farley. Farley has accepted the invitation tendered him after first specifying that his conversation will deal exclusively with sports, and not with politics.

Farley is a rabid football follower and considers Catholic and Georgetown universities two of his favorite teams.

One of the trophies awarded at the banquet will be the Arch McDonald Cup donated by the popular sportscaster. It will be awarded to the outstanding District college athlete of 1939.

Some of the players considered for the McDonald trophy are: Francis Beamer and Joe Murphy, Maryland; George Brown, American U.; Augie Lio, Georgetown; Bob Nowaskey, George Washington, and Rocco Pirro, Catholic U.

Coaches of all five schools are expected to answer the roll call, including Arthur J. ("Dutch") Bergman, Catholic U.; Bill Reinhart, George Washington; George Menke, American U.; Jack Hagerty, Georgetown, and Jack Faber and Al Woods, Maryland.

Pro Golfers Will Team With Movie Players in Benefit

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 11 (AP).—Top-flight professional golfers will team with movie colony players for the benefit of the Finnish relief fund in exhibition matches at the Lakeside Club in Hollywood, January 23.

Fred Corcoran, tournament bureau manager of the Professional Golfers Association, said Walter Hagen would captain the Ryder Cup players. Bing Crosby and Richard Arlen will head the film stars. Each pro will have an amateur as a partner.

The prodelegation will include Byron Nelson, United States open champion; Ralph Guldahl, twice open titlist; Horton Smith, Harold McSpaden, Dick Metz, Vic Ghezzi, Paul Runyan and Jimmy Hines.

Appetites of 'Pro-Bowl' Stars Nightmare for Coast Promoter

Turk Edwards Among Great Food Hounds; Game Booked Sunday

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Jan. 11.—Fancy taking a few guests such as Turk Edwards, Ki Aldrich, Ernie Smith and some 50 other behemoths of the gridiron to dinner for three solid weeks and you have the reason for a promoter's nightmare.

In the present instance, the grid giants are members of the rival Green Bay Packer and National League All-Star teams, the harassed promoter is Tom Gallery and the game is the once-postponed "pro-bowl" clash.

"It won't be postponed again, though," declared Gallery. "Rain or shine, it will go on Sunday at Gilmore Stadium.

"My, my," he added, "how those young men can eat!"

The two aggregations reported in Los Angeles December 23. They've been hard at it since, but most of their work has been at the dinner table.

Time and again rain has forced them to abandon outdoor practice, but the indoor drills haven't interfered with their respective appetites. The two squads look very healthy.

"I kinda like your unusual weather," drawled Davey O'Brien, the former Texas Christian University passing star. Davey, incidentally, is the smallest man of the lot, but he seems to hold his own in such eating company as Bruiser Kinard and Pug Manders. He adheres closely to the old rule of never passing on fourth down; in fact, he won't pass until after the first down.

Four minutes after we found we couldn't play the game last Sunday I walked into the dining room and there was Davey, parked behind the biggest T-bone I ever saw," Gallery observed. "He's a speedy boy, that Davey.

"So are the rest," he went on. "If they tear into each other as they do those potatoes, it will be a ball game."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 11.—Seven of the nine players on the Sporting News' all-star ball club, compiled from the votes of several hundred pretty serious observers, were American Leaguers. The only National Leaguers who could make the club were Bucky Walters (who joins a pitching staff of Bobby Feller and Red Ruffing) and Joe Medwick (who gets into an outfield which has Joe DiMaggio and Ted Williams.)

CONSIDINE

We wonder how the National Leaguers will explain away that one? Of late years the professional National League fans and apologists have conceded that the Yanks are a great team, but faithfully insisted that the second-place team in the National League is as good as the second-place club in the American, and so on down the line. Only the Yanks seem to be out of step.

There was a mild basis for all this. The National League teams either have held their own in spring training exhibition games, against American Leaguers, or even had a small edge—as they had two years ago. The Giants and Cleveland have been remarkably well-matched over the years of their exhibition playing. But a lot could be said on the futility of these games.

Training Game Victories Were Deceptive

For instance, the National League took a bow for gaining a slight edge in these tilts a couple years ago, but had sense enough not to try to attach any significance to the fact that the hapless Dodgers of that era won three straight from the Yanks before the opening of the season. They couldn't have won three more during the rest of the season, against a Yankee team that was playing with the chips down.

There were probably as many National Leaguers, and if that is true they found it impossible to vote sufficiently for the Otts, Myers, Vaughans and other National Leaguers who—according to the league supporters—would be just as outstanding in the American League.

My sober hunch is that the National League, partly because of this Sporting News poll, partly because of the things we saw this past year, is in the worst condition it has ever been in so far as the merit of its players is concerned. The immediate future shows no relief in sight. Dean, Hubbell, Hartnett and Lombardi are through. The more aggressive and progressive methods of American League owners would seem to be cornering U. S. baseball talent. How many good rookies can you name who have come into the National League in the past four years—rookies good enough to be classed in the same sentence with DiMaggio, Feller, Williams, Gordon, McCoskey, Keller, Tabor, Keltner, Case, etc? How many broken-down American Leaguers have dropped down to the National and found themselves stars or semi-stars again? How many former National Leaguers, other that Dutch Leonard, had outstanding seasons in the American League last year?

Methinks the National Leaguers had better pray again for another close race. If a team as good as the Yanks or the Red Sox (or Cleveland or Detroit on their better days) ever rears its pretty head in the National League it will sweep to a pennant with such alarming rapidiy that even the most confirmed old-leaguer will be ready to admit that, until it learns to ape the powerful and well-rounded attack of the better American League clubs, it must be classed as a fabulous invalid.

Europe's Sports Gradually Easing Up

Sports in England are opening up a little. England's ally, France, though alarmingly closer to those twin scraped nerves called the Maginot and Westwall, is operating almost a full-fledged sports schedule. The British have placed a 15,000 limit on crowds attending football matches. Sid Hulls, the British fight promoter, has made many appeals to have the 5,000 limit on his Harringay boxing shows upped. The English plan horse racing in 1940, but on much more of a piecemeal basis than do the French. Longchamp has scheduled 51 weekends of racing; Vincennes, 20, and Auteuil, 20. The English so cloaked their intention to open up a trifle on racing that at first the only announcements were printed in Racing Calendar, a publication which only a few enthusiasts ever see.

Henry Cotten, Britain's favorite golfer, has raised more money for the British Red Cross than any other athlete over there. He plays exhibitions, then auctions off the clubs and golf balls he used. Up until December 4 (the date of the Daily Mail, from which all this has been lifted) he had raised 5,000 pounds.

Wilson Meets Anacostia in Interhigh Twin Bill Feature

Tech Host To Western In Nightcap

Coach Kupka's Team Looms as Possible Winner of Series With Veteran Players

The team that everyone thinks will win the interhigh basketball series—but won't pick for fear of being laughed at—takes its first plunge into the annual free-for-all tonight as the first public high double-header takes place at Tech gym.

It's Woodrow Wilson's club, under the direction of Coach Tony Kupka for the first full year. It's the same team that wound up both its previous flings at the crown so far in the cellar nobody gave it a second thought.

Tonight's foe of the green-clad Presidents will be Anacostia, which started its second season in the interhigh family Tuesday with a 5-point loss to Eastern's defending champs. In the other half of the twin bill Western and Tech start their 1940 series efforts. The first game gets under way at 7:30.

Wilson Has Good Material

Observers have good reason for favoring Wilson as 1940's champion. They also have reason for looking the other way when pinned down. Wilson has probably the finest, most experienced material of any of the seven teams. "Moke" MacDonald, Bartley Fulger and a gangly new center, Roy Cowdrey, rank with the best in the city. Little Jim Jackson, Jordan Bentley and Julie Columbus are well above the average in talent. Added to this, Wilson's new Coach Kupka has behind him an impressive record with his air-tight zone defense. He gave Bethesda-Chevy Chase its best year in history two years ago when he pushed the team to the finals of the Washington and Lee tournament.

Against these arguments, and the fact that the Presidents have won 3 out of 4 preseries games, is the performance Wilson turned in last year. With material almost as good it romped to the semifinals of the interhigh tournament and there choked up worse than Roosevelt, the original "choker-up." Eastern beat it easily to end disastrously what might have been a banner year.

Tonight Wilson faces in Anacostia a team with the same zone defense and more fight than any quintet has shown to date. Wilson will be favored, but fans will be expecting something out of the way to happen.

Western-Tech Battle Toss-up

The Western-Tech battle could go either way, too. The Manual Trainers have been rudely shuttled around so far, losing three out of four starts, though an improvement was shown in each. Western has looked better, winning five out of six. The Blair team that edged out Tech was convincingly trounced by Western with a second-half spree. At that, Western will be hard put to take the measure of the well-coached McKinley five.

Besides these two feature games, local scholastic teams indulge in a total of nine games today and tonight. Afternoon clashes feature Eastern at Bethesda, Thomas Jefferson at Washington-Lee, Boys Latin of Baltimore at St. Alban's, Landon at Baltimore Friends, Rockville at Maryland Park and Woodward Prep at Friends. Night games bring together Roosevelt and Martinsburg High on the out-of-town court and Blair and Mount Rainier at the latter's gym.

Double-Header At Tech Tomorrow

Another high and prep school double-header was booked for Tech High gym tomorrow night when Gonzaga and Central moved their game up to 7:45 and Roosevelt booked a game with Devitt Prep for 8:45.

The Gonzaga-Central battle was originally booked for the afternoon, while Coach Herman Littman booked the Devitt tilt for his Roosevelt cagers at the last minute, to fill in another of the popular double bills.

Littman also announced Roosevelt's February tilt with Woodrow Wilson High, of Portsmouth, Va., had been canceled by the Virginians.

G. U. Five Tackles Scranton Tonight

Georgetown University's basketball team, defeated by Penn State at State College, Pa., last Wednesday night, shifts to Scranton, Pa., tonight for a game with Scranton University's tossers.

The Hoyas, who have won only two out of their six starts to date, are resting on the short end of the odds.

Coach Elmer Ripley is expected to return George Pajak, high scoring forward who has been suffering a stage of la grippe, to a starring forward where he will pair off with Buddy O'Grady. Otherwise Jim Giebel will jump center and Capt. Johnny Schmitt and Irving Rizzi will remain at the starting guards.

Devitt Prep 33-14 Victim Of St. John's

Joe Corrado and Frank Cady Lead Attack With 15 Points Apiece

Two prep school teams without a victory between them met yesterday and St. John's moved into the winning column for the first time by more than doubling the score on Devitt, 33 to 14, in the Johnnies gym.

Beaten twice by Central, and once each by Bethesda, Anacostia and the Alumni, the Johnnies had lost five in a row while Devitt ran its losing streak to three straight, with G. W. Frosh and Western previous conquerors.

Frank Cady and Joe Corrado scored 30 of the 33 points between them, 15 each, and staked the hosts to a 16-9 lead at half time. They outscored the Devitt five, 17 to 5, in the next two periods, with Herbie Munhall breaking into the scoring column for three points. Six other players for the winners were scoreless.

Clements and Kemp led the Devitt attack with 6 and 5 points, respectively.

The non-varsity members of the senior class at St. John's beat the Jayvees, 8 to 7, in a preliminary.

Maryland, C. U. Boxers Face Crack Southern Foes Tomorrow

Terps to Battle Duke In Ring; Richmond U. On Court; Brown Fights

With a basketball victory over Duke University already to its credit, Maryland University will send its boxing team out tomorrow night in an attempt for a double triumph when the North Carolinians invade College Park for the second half of a double-header.

The Terp basketball squad will take the floor at 8 o'clock in an underdog role against Richmond University, while the mittmen follow about 9:15 as favorites over Duke.

The debut of Bob Brown, football tackle who has turned heavyweight, will attract major attention of the night.

Brown, who stands 6 feet 1 inch and weighs 220 pounds, has been making great strides under the tutelage of Coach Heinie Miller and is expected to be one of the mainstays of the squad this year.

The boxing team will be launching a defense of its 1938-39 Southern Conference championship with but three letter men returning—Bib Bradley, featherweight; Nathan Askin, lightweight, and Newton Cox, 165-pound conference champion.

Duke, however, has but two lettermen back—Capt. Faison Jordan, in the feather division, and Ed Morel, 155-pounder. Bradley and Jordan fought to a draw last year, when Maryland defeated Duke, 5 to 3. Duke has tied the Terps twice in four meets, but has never won.

Hotsy Alperstein, brother of Benny, who held two Southern Conference titles in his three years of boxing for Maryland and who is now assisting Miller, will start his varsity career as a boxer in the 145-pound class.

The Maryland basketball team, with five victories in their seven games so far this season, will be up against a Richmond quintet which has won all four of its games—two of them within the Southern Conference.

Maryland will start its usual combination of DeWitt, DuVall, Weidinger, Mondorff and Mulitz.

Miami U. Invades Brookland; Turner to Meet Ace Heavyweight

Catholic University boxers will pin their hopes for victory on sheer punching power tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock when they set out to protect their undefeated status of 1939 against a roving team of Florida fighters from Miami University in Brookland Gymnasium.

The Miami team, fresh from a victory over the powerful little Clemson College squad Wednesday night, arrived in Washington this morning at 1:35 o'clock and will go through a light workout today at the Cardinals' gymnasium.

Bad news for at least one Cardinal boxer—if not the entire team—drifted in with the Miamians in the form of a 235-pound heavyweight.

Jay Turner, who ordinarily carries the torch for C. U. in the 175-pound class, has been elected to face the Miami heavy, Tommy Kearns, as a substitute for Julius Stanges, regular heavyweight out with a knee injured in the Sun Bowl football game.

Knockout Artists

If the Cardinals can win one match in the lighter divisions, however, Coach Eddie LaFond is confident of victory—largely because the "men higher up" form one of the most potent quartets of knockout artists in college boxing.

Between them, Turner, Fred (Bingo) Stant, Gerry Strang and Capt. Joe Bunsa have piled up 21 knockouts over the last two seasons, and it is their ability to hit hard upon which LaFond depends tomorrow.

Turner's fight with Kearns will take the spotlight owing to the fact that it will see the Cardinal fighter spotting his opponent a little matter of 53 pounds.

"We're not worried about that—the bigger they come, the slower they are," LaFond said in tones loud enough to reach the area where Turner was punching a bag thoughtfully.

One of the few men on the squad who did not play football for C. U. last fall, Turner observed that he didn't think he had much to worry about.

Turner Stopped Gaugler

Only last year, Turner was in something of a similar spot against V. P. I.'s heavyweight, Jim Gaugler, who went on to win the Southern Conference championship. He knocked out the Virginian.

Not a skillful boxer, Turner makes up for what he lacks in science by wearing his opponents down with a punishing left hook to the body and then finishing them off with his right, or the left—he's not choosy.

Stant, national intercollegiate middleweight champion, will have to step out of his accustomed 165-pound class to fill Turner's date in the light-heavyweight division. He will be outweighed a scant ten pounds.

The lightweight divisions were still a question mark yesterday as C. U. went through their final heavy session. Price Welch, 120-pounder, and Don Miller, 135-pounder, are putting up a battle with Ted Mandris and Johnny Tedder for starting positions.

Miami, undertaking the unusual task of three matches in a week's time on the road, will clash with Columbus University Tuesday night. Here's how the line-ups will look tomorrow night:

Furr's Right Hand Under X-Ray Today

Capital Fighter Wants To Make Sure He's Ready for Theodorescue

They are going to probe the dynamite content of Phil Furr's right hand today with an X-ray machine in a final check-up before his fight Monday night with Milo Theodorescu in Turner's Arena.

The idea is to determine if it's safe for Phil to use the once-broken hand in all its fury on the cranium of the Rumanian.

"I been knocking 'em down with that hand, but they don't stay," Phil complained bitterly yesterday. "I gotta find out about that hand so I can get over the idea of favoring it all the time. All I want the doctor to say is that my hand is okay and my fans will see a new Phil Furr in that ring Monday night."

Furr has a date with Dr. Julius Neviaser, local bone specialist, to probe the condition of the hand he broke in a fight with Ceferino Garcia.

The local welterweight "champion" has floored all of his opponents in the five fights he has had since he started his comeback.

Washington Eagles Sign New Player

To Replace Injured Kuntz at Left Wing; Expected for Next Game

A 27-year-old skater Coach Redvers Mackenzie terms the "brainiest player in amateur ice hockey" has been signed by the Washington Eagles to replace their injured left wingman, Alan Kuntz, it was announced yesterday.

The new wingman is Bruce (Bunny) McKillop, now playing hockey in Coleman, Alberta. He is expected to report in time to join the Eagles in their Eastern Amateur League game Tuesday night with the Atlantic City Seagulls, at Riverside Stadium.

McKillop, who played with Mackenzie at Atlantic City for six years, is the ideal man to fill the vacancy caused when Kuntz fractured his wrist last week, the Washington coach announced yesterday at the biweekly luncheon of the Washington Ice Hockey Writers Association at the Stables, Twenty-sixth street and Riverside drive.

"He can skate on a dime, and he's positively one of the greatest defensive forwards I've ever seen," Mackenzie said.

The Eagles' mentor also revealed that he has dropped his protest of the recent loss to River Vale's Jersey Skeeters when a player's stick hit the time clock and shortened the final period some seven minutes. Mackenzie, however, voiced a strong protest against conditions at the New Jersey ice arena in a letter to Eastern League officials.

Dallas Shirley Stars, but Team Loses, 39-37

Dallas Shirley, former George Washington U. courtman, and his Alice Deal Junior High faculty members came through with a belated rally yesterday in their home gym but fell two points short of a tie with the Wilson Teachers College Jayvees, losing 39-37.

Thus the boys who weren't quite good enough to make the varsity lineup of Doc White's Wilson Owls won their fifth game in 10 starts.

Leading 39 to 25 with three minutes to play, the Jayvees watched "Tut" Teeples, a former Wilson player, pot four in a row from the sideline and Shirley toss in two more for the faculty members to reduce the margin to two points but the final whistle stopped the rally. The eventual winners led 17-8 at halftime.

The Jayvees will seek their sixth victory of the season tomorrow night in the Wilson gym when they meet Damascus High School at 7 p. m. in a preliminary to the Wilson-Blue Ridge contest at 8 p. m. Damascus is coached by Bob Williamson, of the Wilson '39 class. The varsity-Blue Ridge contest looms as a toss-up.

Rockville's Five Beats J. C. C. and Gets Cold Shoulder

Local independent basketball teams are shunning the Rockville A. A. Club, so the boys out in Maryland say. So far, only the Jewish Community Center five has been lured out to Rockville and the Heurich League leaders came back with a 52-35 defeat administered last Wednesday night. Rockville wants to play all-comers and will do so on a home-and-home basis. So far, Rockville has played 19 games and has lost only two, one to the Baltimore Lithuanians whom they meet again this Sunday. The Rockville squad includes Horace Hershberger, Fred Lanier, Reds McCloskey, Jack Markland, Sully Mills, Robert E. Lee, Carl Becker and Dawson Wooten. Challenges will be accepted at Rockville 321.

Little Panzer College Five Winner of 24 Straight Games

By the Associated Press

East Orange, N. J., Jan. 11.—Big-time college basketball coaches may be astounded at the way Al Gorton teaches the game at little Panzer College, but they'll have to admit it has paid dividends.

Gorton believes a good defense is better than a good offense, a view in which most coaches don't concur.

"If they can't score we have to win," Gorton says. "Dog your man so he can't pass or receive a pass and he can't score or help a teammate score."

Panzer has won 24 straight games to equal a school record set in the 1930-31 seasons. Panzer's last defeat was in December, 1937, when a powerful Long Island University five turned the trick by six points. Gorton's team scored one of the season's big upsets two weeks later by humbling New York University on its own floor. Neither scheduled Panzer this year.

Gorton doesn't put too much stock in the kind of basketball taught by Howard G. Cann at N. Y. U. or Clair Bee at L. I. U. Cann holds that the principle of basketball "was, is and always will be to put the ball through a hoop as often as time will allow." Bee teaches his players to be "ball hawks" on the theory that if you can get the ball away from the other fellow, he can't score and you can.

Of course, Panzer has to score. Gorton has a veteran team which centers its attack around a 6-foot, 7-inch center, Herman Knupple, who takes a position near the basket. His teammates feed him the ball, he pivots and drops it in. That's the Panzer offense.

Knupple scored 28 points last night when Panzer whipped its neighbor, Upsala, 56 to 43, for victory No. 24.

McIntyre Miners Meet Eagles Here Tonight

In typical pose above is Lorne Beare, goalie for the Northern Ontario Ice Hockey League champion McIntyre Miners, who meet the Washington Eagles tonight at Riverside Stadium in a game for the Finnish Relief Fund. Beare is said to be one of the greatest goalies in Canadian amateur hockey

Ten Per Cent of Receipts for Finnish Relief; Canadian Hockey Team Unbeaten In Northern Ontario League; Kuntz Is Out

The first in a series of sports events for the benefit of the Finnish Relief Fund will be staged tonight when the second place Washington Eagles meet the colorful McIntyre Miners, leaders of the Northern Ontario Senior Ice Hockey League, at Riverside Stadium.

Ten per cent of the gross receipts will be turned over to the Washington chapter of the relief fund, and a record crowd is expected to see the Eagles in their latest attempt to cut down the lead of the New York Rovers in the Eastern Amateur League race.

The Miners, undefeated in Northern Ontario Hockey League competition, are bringing to Riverside a team ranked on a par with the Toronto Goodyears and Montreal Royals, who defeated the Eagles in earlier appearances here by scores of 6 to 2 and 8 to 4, respectively.

Routed Orioles

The McIntyre club sounded a warning to the Eagles Wednesday night in Baltimore when they made their 1940 Eastern League debut with a 5-to-2 rout of the Orioles, pumping five goals into the net in rapid succession after conceding Baltimore an early one goal lead.

The Canadian clubs have scored impressively in Wills Cup Trophy competition with Eastern League clubs this season, getting eight victories and recording one tie against only two defeats.

The McIntyre Miners reported here yesterday and will rule a heavy favorite over the Eagles, who will be playing without the services of swift-skating, high-scoring Alan Kuntz. Kuntz suffered a fractured wrist in last Tuesday night's match with Baltimore and will be replaced at left wing by blond Ross Knipfel, who will team up with Ray Covert, center, and Hal Dewey, right wing, in one of the favored combinations.

Alternate Goalies

The invaders tonight will feature alternate goalies with great records in Lorne Beare, formerly with the Atlantic City Sea Gulls and Boston Bruins, and "Hack" Gordon, one of the finest young goalies in Canada today.

Beare, only 23 years of age despite unusual experience, is a standout in a hotbed of Canadian hockey, while Gordon is a shifty and alert youngster who is improving every time out. They frequently are alternated in the course of a match.

Brewers Visit Orioles Tonight

One of the real rivalries in professional basketball will be resumed at Baltimore's Coliseum tonight when the American Basketball League leading Washington Heurich Brewers invade for a game with the Baltimore Clippers.

On Sunday afternoon the Brewers are to entertain the Troy-Celtics at Heurich gymnasium at 2:30 o'clock.

The Brewers have twice conquered the Clippers this season, winning an early season game in Baltimore and more recently routing the Clippers at Heurich gymnasium.

Napper Tandy Wins Hialeah Feature in First Florida Test

$5.40 Choice Drives Home In Top Event

Galsum Gets Second Money in Battle At Seven Furlongs; Five-Fifty Winner

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 11.—Napper Tandy, making his first public appearance since finishing second to Gridiron in the Rhode Island Handicap at Narragansett last November, began his Florida campaign with a driving victory in the seven-furling Jacksonville Purse, top attraction here today. The Phillip Schwartz colorbearer, a $5.40 for two choice, gave Jockey Alfred Robertson a double as he finished in 1:24 2-5 to register by three-quarters of a length.

W. E. Boeing's Galsun followed the victor under the wire, two lengths in front of W. C. Winfrey's One Jest. Our Ketcham was fourth in the field of ten 4-year-olds and upward.

Napper Tandy, a gem of consistency, has been no worse than third in his last eight trips to the post. His victory was witnessed by about 8,500 fans. The bright sun that attended the record opening the previous afternoon was in hiding today, but the racing strip had dried out to fast condition.

Two-Horse Race

The first two horses had the issue between them from the start. Napper Tandy sprinted into a narrow advantage in the first quarter mile, after which he drew clear. Galsun responded to Ronnie Nash's hard riding in the stretch and forced the winner to a hard drive. One Jest, well placed in the running, could not menace Galsun.

A 2-year-old that has been highly touted for weeks in advance lived up to his pre-race reputation in the three-furlong opener, in which baby colts and geldings had their initial baptism under fire.

Mrs. Hunter Lyon's Five Fifty, an aptly named colt purchased for $550 at the Saratoga yearling sales last season, was the favored one in the field of 10. Running to his brisk morning trials, the son of Westy Hogan led all the way by a wide margin and scored by three lengths to pay $3.90 for two. Don Meade, leading American jockey of 1939, was astride the brown youngster for his first triumph of the new year.

Indeed took the place, showing a nice brand of foot from the start. He headed the forward running Pacifier right at the end. The time, made over a fast track, was :34 2-5.

Horse Registration Recommended by Race Association

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Jan. 11.—The National Association of State Racing Commissioners recommended today that the various States adopt a rule requiring that registration papers be filed with track secretaries wherever a horse races, the papers to be turned over to the new owner when a horse changes hands.

The rule is designed to enforce a stricter record of race horses, to aid in identification.

It also was recommended that owners present the past records of imported horses.

Miami was awarded the 1941 winter convention over a strong bid by California.

FIVE FIFTY, quickest to begin, drew out at once, continued to bear out while increasing his lead, and but for this may have won by a greater margin. INDEED, a forward contender throughout, outlasted PACIFIER in the final drive. The latter hung in the closing strides. LOCHLEA raced evenly.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:31. Off 2:32½. Winner, King Farm's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALTEE, $41.00, $12.60, $7.10; KEN'S POP, $3.20, $2.60; DEEP SUMMER, $3.60.

BALTEE, quickest to begin, shook off repeated challenges from his opposition in the early running and, responding determinedly when placed to a drive, held on long enough. KEN'S POP, tardy to find his stride, began to work his way up between the leaders in the last 3 furlongs and was nearing the winner down. DEEP SUMMER, well up the entire trip, outlasted ARCHED when it came to a drive. ARCHED quit badly after showing early speed.

Daily Double, FIVE FIFTY and BALTEE, Paid $124.30

THIRD RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward, fillies and mares. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:00. Off 3:00½. FORE ISUS, easily the best, drew out rounding the first turn under steadying restraint and raced in front while saving ground, won with speed to spare. HIGHMINDED, slow to get going, gained steadily in the final quarter mile on the extreme outside and wore DARK MAY down. The latter, a forward factor all the way, faltered slightly in the final drive. BESS B. had no excuses.

FOURTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:32. Off 3:32½. Winner, Mrs. C. S. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SHOHOLA, $13.50, $7.00, $5.50; ISAIAH, $12.20, $8.10; PRESIDENTIAL, $5.70.

SHOHOLA, breaking a fast pace in the early stages, bore out slightly entering the stretch, but finished gamely to wear ISAIAH down in the last strides. ISAIAH, going in his best form, showed high speed while saving ground, held on gamely when challenged, but was unable to stave off the winner's bid. PRESIDENTIAL outrun the first half mile, swung around the field turning into the stretch and closed fast to wear MANAMAID down. The latter slipped through on the inside all the way and finished soundly. GOSHEN tired in the final furlong.

LITTLE RISK held her opposition safe for speed and, steadied in front, held sway the entire trip to win as her rider pleased. BRIGHT VIEW gradually bettered her position while slipping through on the inside and easily disposed of TOY FOOT. The latter, well up early, faltered in the final furlong, yet held the remainder safe. BILLIE DAY could never improve position.

SIXTH RACE—Seven furlongs. Purse, $1,200; allowances. The Jacksonville. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate (out of chute). Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:31½. Off 4:32. Ida Simmons Dixie Pin Choice

Is Favorite For $100 Top Prize Here

Nine-Game Event On Tap Tomorrow; Lorraine Gulli Seeks Fourth Title

Ida Simmons, Norfolk's blonde women's duckpin leader, will be after her fourth straight Dixie Sweepstakes crown and a fifth in the last six years when some 50 or more of the top-ranking stars meet here tomorrow for the ninth annual nine-game event.

Miss Simmons and her predecessor atop the women's duckpin rankings, Lorraine Gulli, have won the event seven out of eight years, with Baltimore's Lotta Janowitz breaking the streak in 1933. Miss Gulli won the first in 1932 and repeated in '34 and '36 for three triumphs to four for Miss Simmons.

The Norfolk ace holds the record, a 1,151 count two years ago while last year her 1,118 count was the third highest score. Miss Gulli was runner-up last year, only 10 pins back. A prelim is scheduled at Arcade tonight.

The event will start tomorrow afternoon with the first shift taking the Arcadia Alleys at 1 p. m. The field will move to Lucky Strike for the second block at 3 o'clock, and Rosslyn for the final, starting at 7 p. m. First prize is $100.

Two records, only a week old, were thrown into discard at the Temple Alleys in the Southeast League. The season team record of 659, rolled by the Brinkley's team last week, went by the boards when the Bantam Press massed 26 marks to shoot a remarkable 680-team game. A big factor was Everett Ballard's 161 and "Cutie" Hayre's 140. Bantam also rolled second high team set of the season of 1,877.

Gus Placoes took the honors with the second season record high individual game of 172—rolling 2 spares and a quadruple strike. It is the first time a quadruple strike has been recorded in the Southeast League.

Six 400 sets rolled last night—Everette Ballard, 425; Gus Placoes, 419; Roger "Reds" King, 411; Brad Manley, 408; Walter Isaksen, 405, and "Reds" Jenkins, 402.

LUCKY STRIKE

Joe DiMisa smashed the individual high game mark in the National Capital League at Lucky Strike, an all-time record of 188, while his other games added to a 436 set. DiMisa's Master Barbers teammates won two from the second place Chaconas Market. The leading Shaffer Flower Shop team won two from Jalepe's Restaurant with 406 sets on each side. Ernie Hauser for the winners and Al Wright for the losers.

Ray Kelly had a 134 game for Costello Post in the American Legion League at Lucky Strike, while his Costello Post team had the best team game of 594. George Grimes had 367 and the Nash team 1,671 as they won three from Roosevelt.

ARCADIA

Hydrographics won the first half pennant in the War Department League at Arcadia by winning three last night while the second place Lithos dropped three games. Lloyd VanHorn led the Hydros with a 156 game and 391 set, while the team had high game of 617. Barbettes topped the team sets with a 1,691 total.

Catherine Fry was the Ladies Federal League leader with a 147 game while Dorothy Ing, of HOLC, had a 354 set. Curtis topped the teams with a 592 game and 1,671 set.

Beulah was the winning name in the Ladies Veterans' Administration League. Beulah Dicks posting high game of 128 and Beulah Morgan the best set, 305. Insurance had a 499 team game and Construction a 1,409 set.

COLUMBIA

A big 147 game and 372 set by Dave Walsh led National Capital Parks No. 1 into first place in the Interior Afternoon League at Columbia. The new league leaders won three from Survey and posted team game and set totals of 601 and 1,767. Other high sets included Tolson Brown, 139-346, and Bill Dawson, 345, as Miscellaneous won three from Engineers.

CONVENTION HALL

The Singer brothers, Dave and Julius, paced the Sports Center pinmen to an all-time league record in the Hebrew League at Convention Hall, a 1,876 team set. Dave had 420 and Julius 394, while Mark Gerber had 369, Harry Mostow 352 and Walter Foer 332. They broke their own record of 1,811.

RECREATION

Kann's moved into first place in the Department Store Bowling League at Recreation, the closest pin race in the city. Henry Miller had a 379 set as Kann's routed Raleigh Haberdasher three straight.

Billy Kingsolver pounded out a season's record of 415 with games of 146, 130 and 139 as The Hecht Co. won the odd one from Landsburgh's. The second place Woodward & Lothrop team dropped two to the cellar-holding Credit Bureau, while Garfinckel's won two from Jelleff's, with Donald Deane's 373 high. Guy Curran dropped two to Goldenberg's.

PETWORTH

Marie Sawaya topped the high-game scores for the second straight week in the Inter-Sorority League at Petworth, with a 139 count. Virginia Kreamer, of Chi Sigma, No. 1, had a 377 set, while the team honors went to Alpha Zeta Beta, No. 1, with an even 500-game total. Chi Sigma, No. 1, tops the league standings with 32 victories against seven losses.

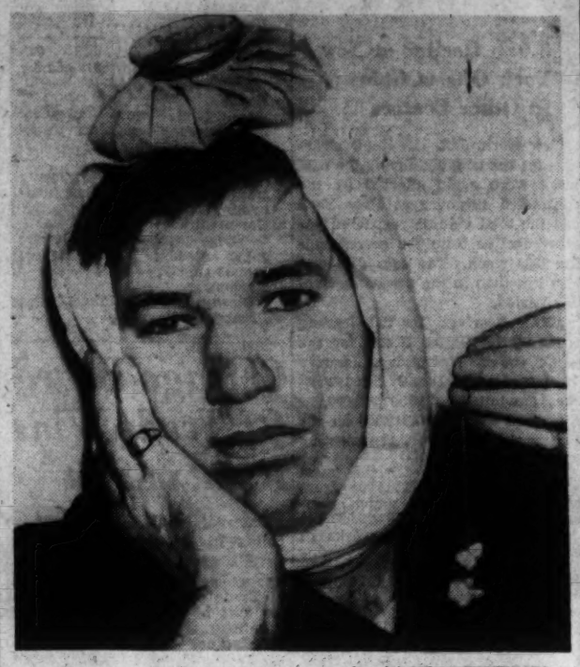
Picture of Dizzy Dean With Two Out



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

It looks like one of those New Year's Day "morning afters," but it's just Dizzy Dean with a slight case of misery on his hands and an ice pack on his head. Here he is after a Dallas dentist pulled out two of his molars, thought to be the cause of the Chicago Cubs' pitching ace's bad arm

Dean Gentle As Holdout; Writes Cubs

'Dizzy' Returns 1940 Contract but Reports He Will Be Ready

Chicago, Jan. 11.—"Dizzy" Dean's 1940 contract with the Chicago Cubs arrived at the Cubs' offices today with no signature on the dotted line.

Instead, Dean sent from Dallas, Tex., a note to Phil K. Wrigley, owner of the team, which said:

"I realize I haven't been much help to the club the last two years, but I still think the cut is too big. However, I'm sure we can adjust things and I'll be all set for spring training on time."

Dean, reported to have received $20,500 last season, was offered half as much as the result of winning only six games in 1939. Charles Drake, asssitant to Wrigley, said Dean wants $15,000. Drake indicated that Wrigley would give consideration to Dean's request soon.

Dean Has 2 Teeth Extracted at Dallas

Dallas, Jan. 11 (AP).—Dizzy Dean is shy two teeth. A wisdom and jaw tooth were extracted yesterday. The Chicago Cub pitcher is seeking the cause of the nerve ailment that wrecked his pitching arm.

Dean, who rejected a $10,000 pay cut several days ago, said he would retire to a farm near Dallas if his arm failed to respond this season.

Fraser, Golfer, Sues for $100,000 Of Geist Estate

Philadelphia, Jan. 11 (AP).—James E. Fraser, nationally known amateur golfer, today sued the estate of the late Clarence Geist in Federal District Court for $100,000 which he asserts the multimillionaire public utilities man promised him in 1933.

Named in the suit are members of the Geist family and executors of the estate.

Fraser, son of the late James Fraser, professional at an Atlantic City (N. J.) golf course for many years, said his father and Geist were close friends and that Geist promised his mother he would take care of her son during his lifetime.

The suit asserts that Geist induced Fraser to give up his chance to graduate from high school and later to give up a job to play golf. At that time, the suit said, Geist made the promise to set up a trust fund of $100,000 for Fraser in his will.

Miss Dean Steals Show, Loses Match

A new type of wrestling villain put in an appearance at Turner's arena last night and promptly stole the hearts of 1,500 customers—Vilma Dean, blonde niece of the illustrious Man Mountain Dean.

Miss Dean was mean but not quite mean enough, and she lost to Mildred Burke, the world's feminine lightweight champion. But Vilma had the house with her. She pulled hair, bit and pulled all the old routines of the leading ring villains. And the largest wrestling card of the season cheered her on. Miss Burke's more scientific cradle hold was the winning point, however.

In the main affair, Joe Cox floored Referee Casey Berger, planted a knee on Alan Eustace's chin and then fell on him as Berger was coming out of a dazed fog. He was declared the victor in 30 minutes.

Tarzan White defeated Rudy Dusek in 12 minutes; Lew Plummer downed Tommy Rae in 13 minutes; Buddy Pappas and Angelo Leone drew and Gino Garibaldi defeated Jim Parker in 14 minutes.

'Dream Half-Mile' Of Boston V. F. W. Appears Certain

By the Associated Press

Boston, Jan. 11.—The hopes of the Veterans of Foreign Wars to stage a "dream half-mile" as one of the features of Saturday's track meet at the Boston Garden appeared realized today when Johnny Woodruff, the Negro star with a 9-foot stride, was added to the list.

Woodruff will meet John Borican, who set the indoor record of 1:49.2 at Dartmouth last year; Charlie Beetham, the national titlist from Ohio State; Campbell Kane, the Indiana sophomore, who won the Sugar Bowl "800," and Gene Venzke, the Pennsylvania veteran.

The half-mile field appears even more impressive than the mile's star-studded list, which includes Glenn Cunningham, Charlie Fenske, of Wisconsin; Archie San Romani, of Kansas; the Rideout twins, Wayne and Blaine, from Denton, Tex., and Luigi Beccali, of Italy, the 1932 Olympic champion.

Stanford Signs Shaughnessy As Grid Coach for Five Years

ceeding Claude E. (Tiny) Thornhill. He will take up his new duties April 1.

Determination to prove that he still is a capable coach despite four disastrous years at Chicago was a major factor in Shaghnesse's decision to leave the midway. He declined to disclose the financial details of the new contract or whether he had made up his mind to quit Chicago when the school's trustees decided to abandon the sport made famous at the Western Conference Institution by Amos Alonzo Stagg.

The decision of the trustees was reached last December 21.

Shaughnessy succeeded Stagg as Chicago's football coach in 1933, coming from Loyola University at New Orleans. The Maroon grid slump already was under way at that time and, although his teams were able to salvage a few Big Ten victories during the career of All-America Jay Berwanger in the 1933-35 period, the situation grew steadily worse.

Shaughnessy stated he hoped to continue "football coaching for years to come," and added:

"It is with pleasure that I accept Stanford's offer. The opportunity to continue my career as a football coach at so fine a university fulfills my ambitions, which are to remain in intercollegiate football for many years to come."

Shaughnessy began his college football career as a star at the University of Minnesota, playing in

Cotton Falls 40 Cents to 85 Cents A Bale

New York, Jan. 11 (AP).—Cotton futures took the path of least resistance today—downward. Demand was slow from start to finish, but not much more could be said of the selling. Final prices were off 8 to 17 points.

Offerings from Bombay and Liverpool tripped the list at the start, following declines in those markets. Around noon pressure let up a trifle and the list tried a comeback.

There was no stamina in the rally, however, and when securities and other staples headed lower, cotton joined in and finished at the day's bottom.

The main stabilizing influence was execution of resting orders to buy March at 11 cents and May at 10.75 cents a pound.

Cottonseed Oil

The cottonseed oil market took a look at declining prices in other staples and prices headed downward today. Final quotations were off 3 to 6 points.

Sales totaled 62 contracts but the trading tempo was restrained by the approach of the December consumption report, due Friday.

January closed 6.85 bid; March, 9.94; May, 7.05; July, 7.15.

Crude oil was quoted 5¾ cents a pound bid in the Southwest and Valley, and 5⅞, nominal, in Texas.

Gen. Electric's Quarter 77 Per Cent Above 1938

New York, Jan. 10 (AP).—Charles E. Wilson, president of General Electric Co., said today the company received orders totaling $112,166,535 in the final quarter of 1939.

This represented a gain of 77 per cent from $63,419,265 in the same quarter of 1938. Total orders for 1939 amounted to $360,768,386. Nearly half again as much as $262,176,223 in 1938.

Wheat Prices Drop in Heavy Transactions

Canada and Australia Sell 100 Million Bus., Mostly to Britain

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 11.—World wheat prices slumped today following disclosure of the largest international transactions in the commodity in the memory of veteran dealers. Dollar quotations were erased momentarily in Chicago for the first time in a month as prices here dropped 2 cents a bushel or more.

Negotiations estimated to involve approximately 100,000,000 bushels, mostly Canadian and Australian, were reported completed the past 2 days with Great Britain the principal buyer.

However, failure of these large governmentals to stimulate any strength in world markets caused substantial selling by private interests. Because the transactions were handled largely by Government agencies, exporters who sold wheat found it unnecessary to buy back "hedges" on what grain had been protected in futures pits. Traders here understood the Canadian board provided exporters with the necessary futures.

After advancing as much as ¾ cent in early dealings, Chicago wheat tumbled about 3 cents and closed 1¾-2⅜ lower than yesterday, May 99¾-$1.00, July 97⅛-97⅜. Winnipeg quotations were up a cent at one stage but closed a cent lower. Chicago corn finished ⅜-⅞ down, May 57½-57⅝, July 58-58⅛; oats unchanged to ¼ down; rye 1⅝-1⅞ lower; soy beans ½-1½ higher and lard unchanged to 5 lower.

Fifth District Store Sales Gain 5 Per Cent in Year

Department store sales in the Fifth Federal Reserve District in December, 1939, averaged 4 per cent above sales in December, 1938, and sales in the entire year 1939 were 5 per cent above sales in 1938. In the United States as a whole the monthly and yearly percentages were the same as in the Fifth District, 496 stores selling 4 per cent more in December and 5 per cent more during the year 1939 than sales in the corresponding periods in 1938. December, 1938, had one more business day than December, 1939, otherwise the district and national increases last month would have been higher.

The accompanying table shows individual percentages for cities in which three or more stores reported for December, 1939, and for comparative purposes the changes in sales in December, 1938, over sales in December, 1937, are included in parentheses.

Last Hour Establishes Lows for 1940; Politics, War and Deficits Are Factors; Scandinavian Bonds Continue Advance

New York, Jan. 11.—Declines of from 1 to 3 points were sustained by a number of the speculative leaders today and when the heaviest selling got under way late in the session there was an expansion in activity, bringing the final turnover on the big board to 844,820 shares. The composite average slumped off 0.58 point, which is not sensational in itself, but was enough to carry the list to a new low for 1940 and to increase the case of blues from which the financial district has been suffering.

The stock market has been trying to take in its stride a political campaign in which there is the troublesome third-term issue, a war which has failed to produce substantial orders and another deficit in a long series. This has been a difficult task and one which has virtually canceled out the benefits that ordinarily would arise from a business pace which has been quickened for almost three months.

Associated Gas

To the ordinary run of troubles such as the above, the financial district had today to appraise the bankruptcy of Associated Gas & Electric Co., one of the major holding companies in the power and light industry. Back ten years ago, when the depression began, there were those who predicted freely that Associated Gas would be one of the first companies to go through the wringer of bankruptcy. They were wrong, and the company, despite its heavy indebtedness, kept above water until this week when the Securities and Exchange Commission gave the top holding company the coup de grace by refusing to let its subsidiary, bearing a similar name, pay dividends or interest on obligations held by the parent company.

The action of the SEC left no course open to the company other than reorganization. This at a time when it was hoped the company, which is fifth largest in the country in its industry, could overcome its many difficulties.

Associated Gas has no issues listed on the big board. Those which are on the curb broke sharply and contributed to the unsettlement of other stocks in all securities markets. Its five issues of bonds were off from 5 to more than 9 points. Its stock issues did not have far to fall, but their small declines were large on a percentage basis.

Loft Off 2 Points

No group on the big board was able to make upward progress and the severest pressure was noted against the utilities, rails, aircraft and steels. Most active was Loft, which broke nearly 2 points. Steel was weak, breaking 2½ points, while Bethlehem was off 3¼ and Republic 1¼. Among the motors Chrysler was down 2, General Motors a point and Studebaker a half. Curtiss Wright was the most active of the aviations and was off a small fraction while Central and Pennsylvania led the rails to lower levels.

The decline in Loft was accompanied by reports that Congress will not forget the soft drink industry in its search for new taxable assets. Loft is the big holder in profitable Pepsi-Cola, which has made some millionaires, or near-millionaires, in the last few years.

Business news did not affect the market today. Department store sales for 1939, as reported by the Federal Reserve, were 5 per cent above those of 1938. General Electric reported orders for the final quarter of 1939 as 77 per cent above those of the same period the previous year. Increased steel operations were reported in Buffalo.

Bond Market Irregular

Listed bonds were dull and slightly irregular today. The curb dealing in Associated Gas bonds found only a mild reflection in utility holding company issues listed on the big board, small recessions being the rule. But the general trend of speculative securities was downward in any event, and bonds of this description suffered rather less than equities. Highest rated investment issues were neglected and somewhat uncertain. Turnover in all bonds was $7,760,000.

The tendency on the listed market was to regard the SEC-Associated Gas incident as an affair between the agency and the company, and only a little liquidation developed in other utility holding bonds. Speculative rails were soft in numerous instances, but some improved. Communications issues showed small advances, while other special groups were idle.

Scandinavian bonds were marked higher, owing to the new $10,000,000 loan to Norway. Belgian, Italian and other neutral country bonds likewise were in demand. Belligerent country issues were irregularly lower.

Long-term United States Treasury bonds drifted fractionally lower in an idle market.

1939 Gold Imports Nearly Double Total for 1938

By the Associated Press

The Commerce Department said yesterday that gold imports into the United States in 1939 nearly doubled the previous high mark. Last year's gold imports were $3,574,414,000, swollen by unprecedented movements of European capital to this country for safekeeping.

Although gold imports had exceeded $1,000,000,000 in each year since the President revalued gold from $20.67 to $35 per ounce early in 1934, the previous record was $1,979,458,000 in 1938. A year in which gold movement was enhanced by the first Czecho-Slovakian crisis.

No geographical analysis of the year's imports has been compiled yet, but the largest portion came from England and other parts of the British Empire. So far this year, Canada has been the principal shipper.

Last year's silver imports declined sharply to $85,307,000, probably because of the reduction in the United States purchase price for foreign silver from 43 to 35 cents per ounce. In 1938, silver imports totaled $230,531,000.

Another cause of the reduction was the Japanese blockade of China from which a large part of the 1938 silver came. Last year, Mexico and Canada were the chief shippers.

Photography Sales 1.72 Billions in Year

New York, Jan. 11 (AP).—Photography—from a candid camera fan shot to a costly movie epic—has mushroomed into big business with annual sales volume of $1,720,000,000, the International Economic Research Bureau reported today.

Pointing out that modern picture industries have developed out of experiments conducted more than half a century ago by the late George Eastman, the bureau said progress has been so rapid that the laboratory today is five years ahead of the public.

Chicago Board Of Trade Wins Point in Suit

Chicago, Jan. 11 (AP).—A tentative ruling in the 2-year-old case of Cargill, Inc., Minneapolis grain traders, against the Chicago Board of Trade recommended today that the suit be dismissed.

Referee S. Abbott Maginnis in his findings held that the Board of Trade had acted lawfully in expelling the Minneapolis grain house and recommended that Cargill's complaint be dismissed.

His report followed lengthy hearings in Washington, Chicago and Minneapolis on charges by Cargill that the board had entered into a conspiracy to manipulate prices downward in September, 1937. These charges were filed after Cargill had been suspended by the board in March, 1938, for alleged refusal to obey an order to sell approximately 1,000,000 bushels during the September, 1937, corn "squeeze."

Attorney Howard Ellis said the referee's report was "a magnificent victory for the Board of Trade."

Attorneys for both sides have 15 days in which to make suggestions or objections to the tentative report. The referee then makes a final report to the Commodity Exchange Commission and attorneys.

The commission then invites both sides to submit briefs or make oral arguments, or both. The commission, which includes the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce and the Attorney General, then will render a final decision.

Meanwhile, the Secretary of Agriculture has filed charges of violation of the commodity exchange act against Cargill. Hearings on these charges are now being held in Minneapolis.

Idle Bank Money Rises $110,000,000

By the Associated Press

The Federal Reserve Board reported last night a $110,000,000 boost in the supply of idle money in the banks which brought the total to the near record figure of $5,380,000,000.

The increase was due mostly to the continuing flow of money to banks from stores in which Christmas shoppers spent it, with gold imports accounting for some of the increase. The board also said that the 12 Federal Reserve banks sold $7,000,000 worth of Government securities, reducing these investments to $2,477,000,000.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Occasionally, trumping partner's aces, kings or queens is absolutely necessary for the success of the defense.

Today's hand contributed by N. J. Z. jr., is an excellent example.

Today's Hand

North, South Vulnerable.

WEST DEALER.

	♠ 942 ♡ Q J 4 ◇ A K 7 ♣ A K 9 8
♠ A K Q 7 5 ♡ 10 8 6 5 ◇ 10 9 3 ♣ 6	NORTH / WEST / EAST / SOUTH	♠ 6 ♡ K 9 7 3 2 ◇ 8 4 2 ♣ Q 7 3 2
	♠ J 10 8 3 ♡ A ◇ Q J 6 5 ♣ J 10 5 4

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	1 NT	Pass	2 ◇
Pass	3 ◇	Pass	Pass Pass

Opening lead: ♣.

"West opened his singleton club. Declarer played low from dummy and East's queen won. East now returned his singleton spade and West took the next two tricks with his queen and king of spades. West, now seeing that probably the only chance of setting the contract would be to put his partner in to lead a club, underled his ace of spades. East ruffed and immediately laid down a heart because he afterward said his partner must have the ace for his bid. And so what started off as good defense fizzled out.

"No doubt this hand might also serve as an example why declarer should not always finesse the opening lead, especially in this instance when he could have postponed his finesse until a safer time."

Declarer made three diamonds, losing a club, two spades and a spade ruff. Had East returned a club when he was in on a spade ruff, the hand would have been defeated. If East should guess the club situation at once, West can make all three of his low trumps, putting East in each time with a spade ruff.

Though East could argue that his partner should have held the ace of hearts for his bid; though he could justly accuse him of opening a semipsychic, the underlead of the ace when West could just as easily have played it to lead still another spade should have been warning enough that other defensive measures were necessary.

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Listen!

with Slocum

The combination of a beautiful headache and a sharp note from my tailor makes this morning's effort a distinct pleasure. We are about to mount our charger of gold and tilt with the Department of Foreign and Domestic Relations of the New Rochelle Women's Club.

The New Rochelle Women's Club's Department of you know what says it now has a "I'm not listening" campaign on against the morning and afternoon serials which the New Rohelle etc. claims are slushy. On that matter the New Rochelle etc. and the conductor of this pillar are as one. They are slushy. And that "I'm not listening" slogan is also alright with me. I'm not listening either.

But why the campaign. There was once a true and great American humorist who said he had absolutely no sympathy with anybody who was too lazy to turn a dial.

The ladies say they want the serials junked in favor of good music, book reviews and more cultural offerings. My command of the King's English is such that I am at loss for the right word to fit that thought, nevertheless I'll point out that every once in a while we slip a little cultural offering in where a serial is usually heard, and the switchboard girls get their shell pink ears blistered by ladies who are not members of the New Rochelle Women's Club, but are ladies nevertheless.

As for the music sponsors' hearts, if any, are chilly bits of flint, and if they thought the gals would listen to music rather than serials you can be sure there would be music on our airwaves and not serials. And, dear girls of the New Rochelle etc., when you start pining for a morning filled with good old book reviews a thought darts in and out of my tiny little brain. And do you know what that thought is? Well, girls, that thought is that you wouldn't listen to a book review. Maybe you would, girls, but we have figures that prove you never have.

Some of my best friends are members of the Department of Foreign and Domestic Relations of the New Rochelle Women's Club.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Chapter 41

SHE ROSE abruptly. "Then I suppose I can come back, on your terms! Is that it? No, Chris, I've done something I never thought I could do, and you're still too much for me. If I go now, I go for good."

"My darling," he said gently, "I am not altogether the egoistic fool you think I am. I know this life. I saw an aunt of mine going through it, and I know. And I saw someone else try it and fail. I can't—"

She made an impatient gesture. "Must you always play God with me and with my life? If that is love—"

"It is love, Beverly. Some day you'll see it yourself. I've loved you always. I've never changed. Perhaps if I cared less—"

"You'd make me happier! That's silly, Chris, and it's sentimental. It isn't like you. It's romantic nonsense."

He gave her a twisted smile. "But I am romantic," he said. "Incurably romantic, until I look at this!"

It was the first time she had seen his hand since the accident. Now he drew it out of his coat pocket and looked at it, still with the same twisted smile.

"You see!" he said. "It doesn't belong to me. I can't give it orders any more. But I'm tied to it. I can't even cut it off."

"Don't, Chris. It's dreadful to hear you. It's your own hand, your dear hand. It's a part of you, and who knows? Some day—"

But he was putting it carefully and slowly back into his pocket.

SHE STAYED until train time, but neither of them touched that debatable ground again. Only when he had brought his car around and came in to get her did he touch her at all. Then he crushed her to him with almost a groan.

"Good-by, my girl," he said. "Always my own girl, whatever happens."

It was that picture that she carried back with her, going back to her empty house and her quiet life. She could have helped, but he had not wanted her. His pride was too great. She could not fight it.

She was not very well after that. Sometimes she had a pain, a small nagging pain in her right side, just under the border of her ribs. It came and went, and she hardly noticed it. At last, however, came a night of pure agony. She could not even call Martha at first, and so she and the pain were alone together, shut in, walled off, so that there was nothing in all the world but that pain. Later she got help, and when it was over, Ted Lawrence told her practically that she ought to have a gall-bladder operation.

"Better get it out," he said. "You don't want any emergency stuff."

She managed to smile back at him from her bed. "I'd like Chris Arden to do it when he comes back."

"And suppose he doesn't come back?"

"Then it wouldn't matter so frightfully, would it?"

He looked down at her. He was more than half in love with her himself, but he managed to grin. "You're talking like a child. He wouldn't do it, for one thing."

"He would, for me."

One day Beverly saw in the paper that Katie was going to marry Bob Barret, and wondered whether Chris knew it, and whether it would hurt him.

But Chris knew it already and was not hurt. "They'll get along," he thought without resentment. "They're both ambitious, and she'll help him. He's making money, too. She'll like that."

It rather puzzled him that after so long a time together with Katie he felt it so little. But he was busy now, and he had little time to remember. Work was coming in steadily. When the case was beyond his capacity, he would send to some town for help, or—as it happened once or twice—bundle it up in the car beside him and take it to the nearest hospital half a day's drive away. Physically he was well, but not comfortable. Mrs. Miller had not been able to come back, and he managed with a village woman an hour or two a day.

Then one day in February that problem was solved so unexpectedly that later on he was to look back on it and grin with pure delight. He was at his desk that morning when the bell rang, followed by the entrance of a tall, faintly familiar figure in a too blue suit and with a cigarette dangling from an impudent lip. The figure stopped in the doorway and struck an attitude.

"Well, by golly, and if it ain't my old friend the Doc!"

It was Dick Walters, a Dick as insouciant as ever with a cheerful grin, and a suitcase in his hand.

"Dick! How on earth did you get here?"

"Well, that's a long story," said Dick, coming in and settling himself on the edge of the desk. "I was back home, and I heard of your little trouble, so I thought I'd come and look over the ground."

"Well, how does it look, now you're here?"

"Bad to fair. Nothing doing with the arm yet?"

"Not yet."

"Rotten luck." He got off the desk. "I'll go up and park this bag somewhere. Then I'll look around and see what's what."

"Look here," Chris said, "let me get this straight. Is this a visit you're making me?"

"You can call it that if you want. No wages, anyhow."

Neither then nor later did Chris ever know just what that emergence of Dick's meant. He never mentioned the war, save once to boast that he was drawing partial disability compensation. "And believe me, boy, I earned it." He never expressed any gratitude to Chris for the night he had saved him. But after his own fashion he paid back every jot and tittle of that debt, from the first evening when Chris, coming in from a call, found him over the stove, his eternal cigarette in his mouth, holding off the irate day woman who had come in to get the supper.

"It's all right, Grandma," he was saying. "I'm a cook. I used to cook when I was in the pen. Don't you worry about his stomach. I'll fill it."

He literally drove her out, and Chris had some difficulty in pacifying her.

THERE COMMENCED with Dick a new era in Chris's life. Dick had no repressions, no delicacies. What he thought of Katie was bluntly told, once and for all. But the healthiest thing was his attitude toward Chris's infirmity.

"Let's see it, Doc. Don't be a fool. Maybe I can rub some sense into it."

Chris let him examine it.

"Humph!" he said. "Looks like something you found under a stone! Well, let's get at it."

He massaged it daily after that, with singularly skillful hands and infinite patience. He would sit, his cigarette dangling, and work over it, talking to it as one might to a child.

Come on, now, get some sense into you. Quit playing possum. Get a move on you. How's that, Doc?"

From the first that hand and arm were his job, although he took over the entire establishment. He was not an unmixed blessing. He was noisy in the house, whistling and singing. But he fed Chris well, he cleaned the car and drove it on occasion, and he was even useful in the office, for he had no squeamishness.

It was not long before Chris began to feel a faint tingling in that dead arm, and found his knees weak as water under him. He said nothing to Dick about it, but Dick was shrewd. He increased his efforts. He would pick up a finger and hold it.

"Come on, baby. Just a flutter now. Wiggle a bit. Try it, Doc.

Then one night in response to this urging, a finger did move, and Dick let out a whoop and did a dance over the room.

"We've got it, Doc! We've got it beat. A couple of months and you'll be fighting me with it."

Chris could not speak. He sat in his chair looking at the hand. Now he willed the finger to move again, and it did. When he looked up at Dick, he found him noisily blowing his nose.

"I'm the stuff, Doc. Who said your uncle couldn't do it?" He bent down and gave Chris a terrific wallop on the back. "And now how about a shot of liquor to celebrate? Where's the whiskey?"

It was over that temperate celebration that Dick leaned back suddenly in his chair and laughed.

"What's the joke, old man?"

"I'm thinking of Katie. She went overboard, and then the ship didn't sink! Maybe this won't hurt her like blazes."

Before he went upstairs that night Chris put an arm around Dick's shoulders, much to his embarrassment.

"I guess you're even more than even now, Dick."

"Don't go soft on me, Doc. I've had a hell of a good time."

He banged out the door, leaving on one of those mysterious night excursions of his when he sometimes took the car to go incredible distances to dance or, as Chris suspected, to go no distance at all with one of the village girls. And Chris, alone in the house, lighted the lamp in his room that night and stood looking at his hand and arm. There was motion there; not much, but some. It would come back, that hand of his. He had an odd feeling that perhaps, after all, Noel's pragmatic God had bent from His great white throne and made a gesture toward him.

"I am thankful," he said aloud, "to something or other. Thankful and grateful." He was amazed to find that he was trembling.

He still had a long way to go, but at least he had a direction now. Progress. The time came when he could bend his fingers, but there was as yet no grip in them. It was shortly afterward that he wrote to Ted, in that clumsy left-hand writing of his:

"You'll be glad to learn that there are some evidences of union. The hand's still pretty useless, but it's coming back. If it goes on as it has."

His only reply was a telegram, indicating that Ted was having a streak of patriotism, and saying merely, "Three cheers for the red, white, and blue."

DICK WAS STILL there when Noel came home for the Easter holidays. Chrs left the meetng at the station to Hiram and Amy, but all morning he watched across the fields for the boy's young figure, and Dick watched him.

"Think a lot of that kid, don't you?"

"Wait until you see him."

The house was in order and a fire burning in Chris' study when at last a young figure leaped the gate and marched sturdily up the path.

Dick whistled softly to himself. Jerry Ames all over, he thought. But the boy's face was soberer than Ames' had ever been, and the eyes more direct. He listened to the door as it opened and shut.

'Anybody home?"

'Home and waiting, son!" Chris called.

Dick gave them an hour and then appeared with a plate of sandwiches. He found Chris lying back in his dep chair and the boy sturdily planted in front of the fire.

"This is Mr. Walters, Noel," he said. 'He'll tell you that he won the war. But he won't tell you what he's done for me."

Dick looked embarrassed but he grinned as Noel gravely shook his hand and thanked him.

"What's he been telling you?" he demanded. "I wanted free board for a while, and I got it. That's all."

They became great friends, the boy and the man. Chris, wandering into the kitchen after a patient had gone, would find them washing dishes together. But Dick's cheerful unmorality, his purely pagan philosophy, began to worry Chris. Noel was at the imitative stage, and behind him, too, was the heritage of Jerry Ames. Already in those few days he had accepted Dick's flippant speech. Perhaps, Chris thought, he was a little jealous, too. The boy was all he had now, and with Dick's coming there had been a subtle change in their relationship.

"Want to see a case with me, Noel?"

"I told Dick I'd go fishing."

But Dick was playing fair. One day Chris found Noel regarding him with bright, curious eyes.

"Did you save his life? He says so."

"That was my job, son.'

"But he says you carried him for hours and then operated."

"I couldn't very well leave him where he was. It was pretty messy."

Chris was rather quiet that week, and Dick watched him with shrewd and understanding eyes. Then one morning, coming down to breakfast, Chris was astounded to find Dick's suitcase in the hall, Dick in his bright blue suit in the dining room eating, and Mrs. Miller hustling about the kitchen.

What's all this, Dick? You're not leaving?"

I always migrate in the spring, Dock," he sad airily. "Time for my flight, that's all."

Chris tried to persuade him to stay, but he only grew restive. It was when Chris suggested that he ought to settle down somewhere, however, that his eyes became somber.

Cut that, Dock," he said. "I liked a girl once, but somebody got ahead of me. Get 'em and forget 'em—that's my motto now." Then his voice softened. Say good-by to the kid for me, Doc. He's a good kid. I'm not the man to help raise him."

The next minute he was shouting to the kitchen. "Hey, there," he called. "Where are those eggs You don't have to lay 'em. Just cook 'em."

Chris drove him to the station, divided between relief and a sense of loss.

"I'll miss you, Dick. You know that."

"Well, I suppose a fellow would miss a bad tooth!"

They stood on the bare platform, constrained with fear the of grown men for sentimentality. Both of them knew that it was not likely they would meet again; and Chris, looking down at Dick's thin figure in its fantastic clothing, could find nothing to say. Dick, however, was whistling lighthearted1y, his eyes on the track.

"Funny," he said. "Trains always excite me. I like to be going places."

"If you're ever in trouble, you'll let me know, won't you?"

"If I'm ever out of it, I'll tell you. That will be news!"

Noel reached the platform as the train drew in. He was breathless and puzzled, but Dick merely waved him a cheerful good-by.

"Be a good boy and wash behind your ears, kid," he yelled. Then he swung his suitcase onto the platform and mounted it himself. "If either of you ever need me, I'll come on the run," he shouted. "Run! I'll fly."

Smithsonian Reports Many Gains in 1939

1,000 Animals Added To Zoo; 368,000 New Specimens Obtained

More than 1,000 animals were added to the Washington Zoo, and National Museum collections were increased by approximately 368,000 new specimens in the last year, the regents of the Smithsonian Institution were informed yesterday at their annual meeting.

Smithsonian Secretary Charles G. Abbot also reported 12,000 books were "accessioned by the Smithsonian library" and that the "most valuable addition to the National Gallery of Art was the Samuel H. Kress collection of Italian art."

Although new specimens in the museum included a variety of animal and plant life, additions also increased collections of "historical material . . . illustrating the culture of primitive man," he said.

"Notable among the additions this year," he continued, "were stone implements of ice-age man in South Africa and 11,000 plants from South America."

Nearly completed during the year, Abbot reported, was recalculation of the solar constant, "the mean caloric value of solar radiation falling upon a theoretical black body, one cubic centimeter in dimensions, placed at the edge of the earth's atmosphere."

Photosynthesis, the process by which plants make starch and sugar from water and carbon dioxide, was studied by the Division of Radiation and Organisms, he reported.

Among the findings, he said, was that there is a substance which absorbs carbon dioxide from the atmosphere in both light and darkness.

"A significant finding," Abbot stated, "was that the first internode of an oat seedling, whose growth in darkness is necessary to lift the newly-sprouted plant out of the soil and into the sunlight, is quickly inactivated by red light and apparently represents a different principle of growth."

Regents attending were Chief Justice Hughes, Vice President Garner, Representatives Gifford, of Massachusetts; Cannon, of Missouri, and Cole, of Maryland; Chairman Delano, of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission; State Department Counselor R. Walton Moore, Dr. Harvey N. Davis, and Dr. Arthur H. Compton.

Jones Expects 'Satisfactory' Business Year

Loan Chief Warns U. S. Against Being 'Greedy,' However

Jesse H. Jones, Federal loan administrator, said yesterday he thought business barometers pointed to "a fairly good year in 1940—in fact, a satisfactory year if we are not too greedy."

By "greedy," he said, he meant that "the year will be satisfactory if our expectations are not too high."

"We need more national income," he added, "but we should not look for too great an increase at one time. In order to be a healthy increase, it will have to go up by degrees. Your foot sometimes slips when you try to jump too far."

Calls 1939 Satisfactory

He said he expected 1940 on the whole to be as good a business year as 1939, which he said might be regarded as a "satisfactory year," considering that there was a substantial gain in business and employment in the latter part.

Jones said business concerns should be encouraged to invest money in plant expansion and improvement wherever such investments would be sound.

Letdown Expected

Government economists who were asked for their opinion of the business outlook felt that there would be some letdown in the first three months of this year, although it will be moderate, they said, and probably will not be felt by the great majority of people.

Some Administration economists, it was recalled, believed a couple of months ago that a sharp business downturn would take place in February and March of this year. No Government economist now looks for a sharp reaction in these months. Thus the trend of business predictions, it is pointed out, has been upward.

Harvard Finds Vaccine to Keep Whole Nations Free of Typhus

By Howard W. Blakeslee,
Associated Press Science Editor.

New York, Jan. 11.—Discovery at Harvard Medical School of a new method to produce typhus fever vaccine, enough for the first time to protect an entire nation, and probably the whole world, was announced today in science.

Typhus is one of the principal medical worries in the present European war, as it was in the last when delousing of clothing was universal in armies. Lice carry the disease.

It is endemic in Russia and parts of the Balkans. Wars always have spread it to civilian populations. Food shortages render people more susceptible so that historically it is known as the famine disease.

There are two main types, European and American. The American has been far less destructive of life. The Harvard discovery is for the European type, and culminated a 20-year, world-wide hunt.

How to make typhus vaccine has been known. It is done with the bodies of rickettsiae, the germs which caus typhus. But until now there never has been any way to obtain enough rickettsiae.

Poland, until the start of this war, had the only practicable method, but this produced only enough to vaccinate about 20,000 persons a year. When epidemics threaten, millions need vaccination.

The Harvard discovery is no secret. Its publication makes the new mass production method immediately available to all nations.

Mass production is done by combining two new methods of growing the germs which had been discovered in the United States in the last two years. The work is reported by Drs. Hans Zinsser, one of the world's best-known bacteriologists; Harry Plotz and John F. Enders. Plotz is a guest worker at Harvard from the Pasteur Institute, Paris.

These Harvard workers recently discovered that rickettsiae could be grown fairly well on agar, a gelatinous substance from seaweed, but not enough to make sufficient vaccine.

About the same time Dr. H. R. Cox reported in the United States Public Health Service proceedings that the germs could be grown well by infecting fertilized hens' eggs.

Stolen Jewel Hunt Here Awaits Thaw

Thousands in Loot Cached Under Snow, Captured Man Admits

Buried under snow in the Northeast and Southeast sections is jewelry valued in the thousands of dollars loot of a 23-year-old housebreaker who was captured by police Tuesday.

At least that is his story to police of how he cached property in 39 burglaries, some of which he has confessed and others to which police have linked him. Some articles were thrown on roofs of houses and garages, it was said.

Charles E. Leapley, 23, of the 700 block G street northeast, whose police record shows more than a score of convictions for burglary, has pointed out places where jewelry was left, detectives said. Hampered by snow and ice, investigators have decided to hold off the treasure hunt until the snow melts.

Detective Sergts. E. E. Scott and L. M. Wilson and Precinct Detective Irving Lubore captured Leapley in a house in the first block of Eighth street northeast, while they were investigating a broken window. He agreed to confess after continued questioning.

Seventeen burglaries in the Ninth Precinct and 22 in the Fifth Precinct have been charged against him. He was released, conditionally, from Lorton, November 30, after serving four years of a six-year term for housebreaking and robbery.

Leapley was so cooperative "after the jig was up," according to detectives, that he took them to the locations which he had robbed.

Uncertain whether he had robbed a house in the 200 block of Ninth street southeast, the suspect was confronted by William Cox, a resident.

"You ought to know," detectives quoted Cox, "that's my overcoat you're wearing."

Only a small amount of property has been recovered, police asserted, and estimated that loot will probably run as high as $3,000 in the cases. Most of the burglaries were committed during the daytime or early evening, it was said, and the stolen property included clothing, jewelry, money, and even a vacuum cleaner.

20th Century Club Deplores D. C. Leniency on Dope Trade

Gerald Gross, of The Post, Tells Members Light Punishment Encourages Traffic; Organization to Investigate Charges

The civic section of the Twentieth Century Club yesterday adopted a resolution deprecating Washington's position as a "dope peddlers' paradise" after hearing Gerald G. Gross, of The Washington Post editorial staff, cite the Capital as one of the country's worst sore spots of narcotics law violations.

Besides condemning the situation, the resolution provides for an investigation of the charges made by Gross, who laid most of the blame upon "undue leniency" by the District courts in dealing with drug peddlers.

Illustrating the volume of Washington's illicit drug traffic, the speaker pointed out that in December 44 arrests were made in the Bureau of Narcotics' fifth district, of which this city contributed 30. The district comprises Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina, as well as the District of Columbia.

Washington's population, he pointed out, is about 6 per cent of the total of the district but its narcotics arrests constituted 68 per cent of the 44 cases made during the month.

Gross quoted local law enforcement authorities as stating that, while a slight improvement has been noted in the sentencing practices of District Court judges in the last two months, there is still too frequent application of probation, continuances and light prison terms.

The recent case was cited of a peddler who was arrested and then, while out on bond, rearrested for a new series of offenses. Despite the flagrancy of the violations, the indictments against him were nolle prossed at the suggestion of the judge, on the ground that no jury would convict the defendant because he was paralyzed.

The speaker pointed out that the peddler, who is suspected of having returned to his "business," might have been committed to a Federal penal hospital instead of being turned loose without the formality of a trial.

In Washington, as well as Baltimore, Federal and local authorities are cooperating harmoniously in the apprehension of drug law violators, but justice is meted out swiftly and adequately in the Maryland city, whereas it is slow and incommensurate with the seriousness of the offense here, according to the speaker.

Mrs. Paul Ewerhardt, chairman of the club's civic section, presided over the luncheon meeting which was held at the Y. W. C. A.

Lindeman Calls Leaders Need Of Democracy

Democracy, as the most difficult of all social forms, has the greatest need for good leadership, Eduard C. Lindeman, philosophy professor at the New York School of Social Work, said yesterday.

Lindeman, speaking at a luncheon for the board members' council of the Washington Council of Social Agencies, drew a sharp distinction between leadership and dictatorship, declaring that the leadership and dictatorship, declaring that the leader stands in the middle of his group, not out in front.

Development of this type of leadership, he said, is one of the chief tasks of the board members for social agencies.

Chairman of the meeting was Mrs. Harry S. Bernton, president of the Council of Social Agencies. Mrs. Karl Fenning, new chairman of the board members' council, introduced the speaker.

FBI 'Indices' Are Critcized By Marcantonio

By the Associated Press

Representative Marcantonio (American Labor Party), New York, contended yesterday that counter-espionage activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation were "preparing a blackout of the civil liberties of the American people."

Referring to testimony by J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, before an Appropriations subcommittee that the bureau had compiled "extensive indices" of individuals and groups who might be dangerous to the United States in event of war, Marcantonio told the House it smacked of "the Gestapo" or other secret police of the dictator nations.

"If Mr. Hoover has the names of anyone guilty or suspected of espionage or sabotage, it is his duty to apprehend them and put them in jail instead of merely keeping their names on index cards," he asserted. "But if they just hold different views than Mr. Hoover, I submit that these index cards are most dangerous."

Congress May Study Legalizing Gold Circulation

By International News Service

Congressional study of a proposal by Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, to legalize circulation and private ownership of gold, was forecast last night by Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York.

Wagner, who is chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, said his committee undoubtedly would study the part of gold in the Government's monetary policies during an inquiry authorized at the last regular session of Congress.

Judgment on the feasibility of Aldrich's proposal was held in abeyance by Wagner, pending completion of the study, which is to include examination of the functions of the Treasury Department, Federal Reserve Board and other governmental agencies under new banking laws.

Job Placements Break Records

The District of Columbia Employment Center broke records in job placements in 1939. The number was 40,656, an increase of 12,688, or 45.4 per cent above 1938, C. E. Lanson, the director, stated.

Those placed in private industry totaled 36,085, as compared with 25,686 in the preceding year. Industrial and building trades employment brought the greatest gain in placements, with an increase of 68.6 per cent over 1938.

Hotel and restaurant placements were up 47.6 per cent; commercial and professional placements rose 36.7 per cent, and domestic and service placements, 34 per cent.

Smoot-Hawley Act Hit Apple Exports, Says Robertson

By the Associated Press

Representative Robertson (Democrat), of Virginia, commented during Secretary Hull's testimony on the reciprocal trade program yesterday that prior to enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff in 1930 there were no trade barriers in other countries against American apples.

Two years after enactment of that law, Robertson continued, 19 nations had erected such barriers, some establishing quotas, one a complete embargo, some placing duties ranging from $1.50 to $9 a barrel.

Hull, who was testifying, agreed and said that after the Smoot-Hawley measure became law that American trade suffered "overnight due to retaliatory measures."

Secret Service Offices Will Be Transferred Here

Headquarters for the Fifth Secret Service District have been transferred from Baltimore to Washington, Chief Frank J. Wilson announced yesterday. He said Harry Cooper, supervising agent in charge, would move his office here today.

The district includes Washington, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina.

Cooper, who will also serve on Wilson's personal staff, began his Secret Service career with Gen. Pershing in France during the World War. He accompanied President Harding on his fatal trip to Alaska, and was with President Roosevelt on his South American tour.
